Phil Knight drops out of race Suprise—Candidates all want economic development

City council and mayoral candidates voiced their opinions about economic development and social services support at a candidates forum in the LaSells Stewart Center Tuesday night.

Not in attendance at the meeting, which was sponsored by the League of Women Voters, was Ward 2 Council candidate Phillip R. Knight, who apparently withdrew his candidacy Tuesday, leaving Raellee M. Jones as the only contender for the "OSU Ward" seat.

Helen M. Ellis, candidate for mayor, led off the forum by stating her intention to work for state tax system changes in order to attract new businesses to the Corvallis area. She praised the city and its manager and promised not to become a "symbolic figurehead, but, instead, a liaison between the people and the government."

Her opponent, R. Charles Vars, Jr., said he favored the encouragement of economic development with measures such as those included in a city ballot measure extending sewer and water lines to the airport area in order to attract industry there.

On the topic of social services support, Vars said he believed negotiations with Benton County and state institutions might produce social service funding that will be lacking when federal revenue sharing monies are eliminated.

"The city has a continued responsibility," Vars said. "I'm very proud of the way we have managed to develop services and I believe it is necessary to have some tough negotiations."

Jones, an OSU economics student, called her economic knowledge an advantage in seeking a council seat.

"My background in economics helps me to understand what is going on in the city and can help me make sound economic decisions to help Corvallis grow," she said.

She also voiced her support for sewer and water service extension to the airport area.

"If these services are there, it doesn't serve as a barrier to businesses that want to move in," she said.

Jones said she believed the council should examine each social service for its benefits and costs to determine which were most important to fund.

"One way is to set down and assess each part of these social services and find which ones need money and which ones help the most people and go from here," she said.

Richard Gretz, candidate for the Ward 3 council seat, said he viewed the issues of economic development and social service support as inter-connected issues.

"You cannot have a livable community without economic development services, social services and affordable services," Gretz said. "If any one of them is weak, it affects the other two. Everything is tied together."

His opponent, George Baskerville, said he believed the city needed to attract more people to downtown to stimulate that area's economy.

Charles Vars

"One thing I'm really convinced would help downtown and keep downtown strong is the Majestic Theatre," he said.

Ward 6 candidate Joel Davis said he believed the city should examine charges assessed to and permits required of businesses moving into the area to make sure they do not act as "roadblocks" to economic development.

"I would like to say there are some things I wouldn't do for economic development," he added. "For instance, I would preserve the fine zoning system that we have."

His opponent, Dave Bucy, said he viewed economic development as a chain that begins with primary jobs, bringing more people to the area and requiring more housing and causing an increased market.

"The $64 question is how we can attract these new primary jobs," he said. "The big problem is still the state tax system."

Hysteria little help to drug abusers, speaker says

By RICK SMUTNY
of the Barometer

"Just Say No (to drugs) clubs are great, if you're nine years old. But they should be subtitled 'How to lose all your friends,'" said Michael Goldrick, program director of the Sacred Heart Adolescent Recovery Program, or SHARP.

Goldrick addressed a crowd of mostly OSU intercollegiate athletes in LaSells Stewart Center Tuesday night in conjunction with National Collegiate Alcohol (and Drug) Awareness Week. Athletes were required to check in with their respective sport and those who did not attend will have to watch a taped version.

The reason why the current trend to reduce chemical use and abuse isn't working is because it is basically the same one that Americans have been using for the past thirty years, Goldrick said.

He described America's attitude in the 1960's as "we've got this problem and if you use drugs you're a loser and no good." In the 70's it became a big problem and now in 1986 it has become a national crisis and anyone who uses drugs is taking part in the national crisis, he said.

"It's time to start listening to young people and hear what they are saying to America by their behavior," Goldrick said.

A true friend, Goldrick said, will tell you what you need to hear and not what you want to hear:

"I think it's terrific that so many young Americans so desperately want to get down with their friends behind alcohol and other drugs," was his message to the audience.

People who are dependent on drugs are people and don't need to hear that they are useless and that they are worthless and contributing to the national crisis, he said.

America's youth are desperately trying to learn social skills and interaction, but nothing can be retained from encounters made under the influence of drugs or alcohol, he said. A person's natural ability to "get down" with their friends is interrupted by alcohol.

"To the extent that I use a chemical I decrease my natural ability to achieve the same process," he said.

In his speech, which centered on people and intimacy to combat the drug issue, he said the "Just Say No" groups should change their titles to "How to invite people to wellness all the time."

The worst tragedy, Goldrick said, is to know that there is a problem and yet do nothing about it.

Goldrick, formerly a principal of a high school in Texas, left education, because of a scandal involving the death of a two-year-old, to find a solution to the drug problem that he experienced in his school and knew was going on across the country.

The tragedy was a personal one, he said, because he knew the child, the mother of the child and the person, who was under the influence at the time, who caused the death of the child.

His secretary, he said, he will not forget because as a friend she told him what he needed to hear and not what he wanted to hear.

He decided he was going to do something about the problem and went around the country preaching about the detrimental effects of alcohol and drugs but found it to be very boring and wrong.

Everyone, he found, already had "the information" on drugs and what the harmful effects are; it was then he decided on his current message.

Christine Nilsen, a member on the women's crew team, said she expected a rehash of information that is contained on a two-page drug sheet that each varsity athlete is required to sign. "It wasn't what I expected. It was more psychological than clinical," she said.

The presentation dealt more with social relations and was very reassuring in that it is possible to build a relationship without drugs, Nilsen said.

State Department sends fifty-five Soviets packing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The State Department, responding to the expulsion of five American diplomats from the Soviet Union, today ordered 55 Soviet diplomatic officials of the Soviet Embassy in Washington and the Soviet Consulate in San Francisco to get out of the United States by Nov. 1.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman, reading a written announcement to reporters, said 50 Soviet diplomats from the Soviet Embassy in Washington and consulate in San Francisco were being expelled so as to make Soviet representation at those two facilities equal to that of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and consulate in Leningrad.

In addition, he said, four diplomats at the Soviet Embassy and one member of the San Francisco consulate had been declared persona non grata.

All 55 must leave the United States by Nov. 1, he said.

The spokesman said the Kremlin was made aware before it expelled five American diplomats from Moscow and Leningrad Saturday that the administration would adopt measures to make equal the diplomatic representation in the two countries.

The Kremlin's expulsion of the five Americans was in retaliation for the expulsions by the Reagan administration of 25 Soviet diplomats from the Soviet U.N. mission to the United Nations that took effect last week.

Redman said Oleg Sokolov, minister-counselor of the Soviet Embassy, was informed of the latest administration action in a State Department meeting late Tuesday morning by Thomas Simons, deputy assistant secretary of State for European and Canadian affairs.

"The United States has advised the Soviet Union this morning of a number of steps designed to respond to the Soviet expulsion of five U.S. diplomats and to ensure from this step forward, the Soviet diplomatic representation in Washington and San Francisco will be based on the principle of strict equality in numbers with our counterpart representations in Moscow and Leningrad," the State Department statement said.

The equal numbers, Redman said, would be 225 officials at the embassies and 26 positions at the consulates.

Mozambicans mourn president

Mozambique mourned President Samora Machel today and officials prepared to investigate the plane crash that killed the popular Marxist leader and 28 senior government officials and ministers.

The cause of the crash was not determined but the African National Congress — fighting a guerrilla war against South Africa's minority white government — suggested the crash was not accidental and pointed an accusing finger at South Africa, which repeatedly accused Machel of allowing ANC guerrillas to operate from Mozambique.

The ANC, however, offered no evidence to back up its accusation and Mozambican officials made no reference to any suspicion of foul play.

In Komatipoort, the South African border town about 45 miles from the crash site, South African Foreign Minister Roelof "Pik" Botha said he would meet Mozambican officials today to set up a joint investigation into the crash.

Machel's Soviet-built Tupolev 134A jetliner crashed late Sunday in the mountains of South Africa just 200 yards from the Mozambican border and 50 miles west of Maputo, the capital of Mozambique.

South African government sources told two newspapers the pilot claimed he was shot down, but investigators on the scene said pilot error was to blame.

"The pilot apparently mistook the lights of Komatipoort for Maputo," one official told reporters on the scene. "Instead of turning east to Maputo, he turned west into South African airspace."

An air traffic controller in Maputo said the pilot radioed he had the runway in sight for the second attempt and reported moments later he had "lost it." Controllers told him to make an instrument approach but he said he could not pick up the radio beacons at Maputo's airport.

Investigators said the crash occurred after a failed attempt to land at Maputo. They said the pilot aborted his first landing and circled to try again.

They said also that the crash site was about 2,300 feet higher than Maputo and the pilot, if he had mistaken Komatipoort for Maputo, could have assumed he had plenty of clear space below.

According to the Citizen newspaper, the same pilot became lost last year during a flight from Maputo to Johannesburg's Lanseria airport. They said he radioed for help and a controller who could see the plane guided him in.

In Maputo, officials of the ruling Frelimo Party declared a 60-day period of national mourning. No date was set for the funeral.

World leaders praised the charismatic former guerrilla fighter who led his country's battle to overthrow Portuguese colonial rule and became its first president in 1975.

President Reagan said Machel "understood the urgent need for cooperation in the interest of peace in southern Africa."

Despite his avowed Marxism, Machel improved relations with the United States and other Western nations in an effort to bolster his impoverished country's economy.

South African President Pieter Botha said, "My government and I had great respect for him as a leader and a person. Africa has lost an outstanding leader."

British monarch sails into Hong Kong

HONG KONG (UPI) — Queen Elizabeth sailed into sun-splashed Hong Kong harbor aboard the royal yacht Britannia today, welcomed by brass bands, water-spouting fireboats and all the pomp and pageantry due a monarch visiting her far-flung empire.

Long-time observers of the royal family said this could be the last visit to Hong Kong by a British monarch before the colony — the last glittering jewel in the crown — reverts to China on July 1, 1997, at the end of a 99-year lease signed in 1898.

The Hong Kong government, apparently hoping to avoid embarrassments such as the one caused by Prince Philip's remarks in China, warned that people who meet the royal couple during their three-day visit should not repeat their conversations to the media.

Philip raised eyebrows when he described Peking to British students in China as ugly and warned them they would get "slit eyes" if they stayed too long in China.

Government protocol officer Peter Harvey, advising on correct behavior if approached by the royals, told Hong Kong residents exchanges with the royals should be kept private. "I think it is unnecessary" to repeat anything they might say, he said.

Britannia, accompanied by the British destroyer H.M.S. York and scores of local pleasure boats, sailed past the towering skyscrapers of Hong Kong's financial district into Victoria Harbor, where fireboats sent up huge sprays of water and the traditional 21-gun salute was sounded.

"Prince Philip and I come to Hong Kong after a historic visit to China, the first by a British monarch, symbolizing the new relationship between Britain and Hong Kong," the queen said at the elaborate and colorful welcoming ceremony.

Boeing sells eleven jumbos to Japan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Boeing Commercial Airplane Co. and All Nippon Airways announced Tuesday the Japanese airline will buy 11 747 jumbo jets and spare parts for $1.56 billion in a deal expected to ease the growing U.S. trade deficit.

Boeing Chairman T.A. Wilson told a news conference the new aircraft will be delivered over the next five years and that the purchase will permit Boeing to "sustain employment levels" at its factories.

Akio Kondo, All Nippon Airways deputy president and chief operating officer, said the airline signed contracts last year for 25 Boeing 767-300 aircraft worth $2.36 billion. The deal announced Tuesday would mean the carrier now has placed orders for $3.9 billion worth of Boeing aircraft and spare parts in one year.

"Our partnership with Boeing is more solid than ever before," Kondo said through an interpreter. "Our orders for Boeing aircraft over the last 12 months have exceeded the total for the previous 21 years."

"All Nippon Airways is the largest purchaser of American equipment in Japan," Wilson said.

The $3.9 billion purchases are equivalent to 7.8 percent of last year's trade deficit between the United States and Japan. The Commerce Department said this deficit reached nearly $50 billion last year and is expected to be even bigger in 1986.

The exact mix of models of the Boeing 747 jets to be delivered will be determined later. Boeing 747s have been in service worldwide for more than 16 years.

Packwood talks taxes; Bauman lists defense cuts

EUGENE, Ore. (UPI) — The sweeping tax-reform package passed by Congress will govern America's tax structure for five to 10 years, said Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chief architect of the bill.

"Our bill represented the most significant change in the tax code since 1913," Packwood told about 150 people at a seminar sponsored by the Oregon Association of Tax Consultants.

The Senate Finance Committee chairman acknowledged that he already has forgotten some of the nuances tucked into the 2,000-page measure but predicted that the legislation will dictate tax law for "at least five, and probably as long as 10 years."

Packwood, seeking a fourth term against Democratic challenger Rick Bauman, was asked by an accountant how much of his $6 million campaign war chest he would have left after the November election, since the interest on such funds can now be declared as a deduction. Packwood said the figure should hit $700,000 to $900,000.

Asked what he intends to do with the funds, Packwood replied, "I hope to run again in 1992 and use it then. I'd like to think that (Oregon Republican Sen.) Mark Hatfield and I can stay in office another millenium."

Meanwhile, Bauman, a state representative from Portland, issued a list Monday of $62.8 billion in proposed Defense Department budget cuts.

Alien underwater activity in Sweden

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (UPI) — Two windsurfers riding the waves off the Swedish coast heard a loud hiss, then saw a dark object laying still in the water. A few moments later, the object disappeared beneath the surface.

Defense analysts classified what the windsurfers encountered as "alien underwater activity." It was one of some 15 such encounters, mainly by civilians, reported in the past three months, according to a defense staff quarterly report released Monday.

"They put down their sails and spotted a dark object 30 to 50 meters away. The object lay still in the water, unaffected by the waves. A minute later the object submerged and did not show up again," the report said.

Imposters irk worker

By DELIA DORRAN

Whether they are fraudulent or truly handicapped, people claiming to be deaf who extract money from sympathetic strangers on campus have raised the ire of an OSU student.

One such person was witnessed in the Gallery restaurant in MU East last Thursday soliciting donations from diners. He was brought to the attention of Sheila Owolabi, a recent graduate in home economics.

A Gallery worker told Owolabi, who is herself deaf, that the person was selling cards to the diners. "She (the worker) said people were giving money because they were sympathetic," said Owolabi.

Owolabi was able to obtain one of the cards and contacted Joe Wooten, director of the Handicapped Students Organization.

The green, memo-sized card read: "One moment please! I am a deaf person. I am selling this card to make a living. Please contribute what you wish." The card then wished the buyer "Good Luck" and provided a duplication of the manual alphabet on the other side.

"I was embarrassed to see that card. I didn't know why someone would be doing that," said Owolabi.

Wooten echoed Owolabi's sentiment about the incident. He pointed out the possibility of people pretending to be disabled while soliciting money. "Often times, we see people selling these cards that are not deaf," he said.

Owolabi recalled an incident in which she was in a restaurant in Salem when a man selling the same type of cards approached her. "I told him I was deaf and he ran out," she said.

"It doesn't matter who is selling it, it gives a bad impression of deafness. If they need help, that's fine, but no begging," said Wooten.

"The deaf population doesn't like to see deaf or hearing people selling these cards. It's not the right kind of thing to do and deaf people know that," he added. Soliciting on campus without university approval is illegal.

Pointing out the statement on the card concerning "making a living," Wooten said "Deaf folks can and do work."

Neither Wooten or Owolabi are aware of other similar incidents on campus but hope people will be alert to possible recurrences. Anyone seeing individuals soliciting on campus should contact Wooten at 754-3661 or campus security.

War and Peace

"You get a chill in your spine when you think of a world without nuclear weapons," said a U.S. government official, quoted in Los Angeles Times, October 15.

In case you have been held in isolated confinement for the last couple of weeks, under conditions of sensory deprivation, here is what's been happening.

1. Looking for a handy promotional stunt before the November elections, the Reagan administration agreed to a mini-summit in Iceland, which it thought would produce modest headway towards the possible reduction of intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

2. As part of his new sophisticated U.S.-style propaganda offensive, General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev brought along his wife, Raisa, unveiled proposals for abolition of SS-20s, Pershing IIs and Cruise missiles, and further surprised the U.S. delegation by suggesting substantial cuts in the strategic nuclear arsenals. He also asked that the U.S. honor the 1972 ABM Treaty by confining to the laboratory any plans to develop a space-based anti-ballistic missile system.

3. President Reagan insisted that the U.S. would not renounce ongoing efforts to develop and test the components of a space-based anti-ballistic missile system—otherwise known as SDI or Star Wars—and the talks broke down.

4. The U.S. delegation flew home, trying to figure out how to sell the fact that President Reagan foreswore genuine missile and warhead reduction in favor of a system that nobody knows will work and that is in contravention of an international treaty.

So what we've been watching and reading in the past week or so is one of the fiercest publicity blitzes of Reagan's term in office, trying to recover the propaganda advantage.

Strategy No. 1: Stressing of the Reagan administration's profound disappointment that a breakthrough did not occur in Iceland, while simultaneously stressing Reagan administration's profound resolve not to "surrender" Star Wars, the "insurance policy" that the Soviet Union would not cheat on any arms-control agreements reached as a consequence of Reykjavik.

Now in plainer English what this meant was that the Reagan administration insisted on continuing to develop a whole new generation of space-based nuclear weaponry in order to make sure that the Russians would abide by the reductions in air, land and sea-based nuclear weaponry which they themselves had proposed. It sounds ridiculous but it is, and after an initial, brief period of hesitation the networks accepted the argument—even, in the case of CBS on October 15, running a segment on its evening news designed to demonstrate that Star Wars is a viable system.

Strategy No. 2: Suggestion that Gorbachev wanted to "destroy" the ABM Treaty, by proposing that it be strengthened.

This line was first put forward by Secretary of State Shultz and received much play in the immediate post-Iceland coverage. But since the U.S. is developing and testing Star Wars components which is an actual contravention of the ABM Treaty, this strategem had only limited popularity in the major media and has now been virtually abandoned.

Strategy No. 3: Suggestion that it was Reagan rather than Gorbachev who first put forward the offer of major cuts in the strategic nuclear arsenal; added suggestion that Gorbachev did not in fact want an agreement and maintained his demands that Star Wars stay in the laboratory for ten years as a way of scuppering the talks.

The first part of this strategy has begun to enjoy a flourishing existence, partly because it has been seized upon by some liberal advocates of arms control. Typical of this breed was Robert McNamara, secretary of defense under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, who maintained on Nightline that Reagan should be congratulated for his daring vision of disarmament and that we should all urge him forward in his quest for peace. Unfortunately there is no evidence whatsoever, aside from his empty public assertions, that Reagan has any practical program for serious arms control, and McNamara's notion that Reagan can be "encouraged" to adopt the course of reason is foolish in the extreme.

As for the thesis that opposition at home might have forced Gorbachev to kill an Agreement, it is worth remembering as a general proposition that any mainstream U.S. media analysis of the political situation in the Soviet Union is absolutely worthless. Such analysts have not the slightest idea what they are talking about. One could maintain far more persuasively that there is broad consensus within the power centers, and general populace, of the Soviet Union on foreign policy. The head of the Soviet armed forces was in charge of the Soviet emergency drafting team in Iceland. Gorbachev is just as likely to be facing internal opposition because of his attacks on party ossification and inefficiency.

Strategy No. 4: Avoidance of what happened at Iceland altogether, discussion of the World Series instead. Stress of hopes for a breakthrough in arms talks at Geneva. Discovery of Soviet violations of arms control treaties.

In other words, carry on with business as usual.

Gunsmoke

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration and its accomplices in the mainstream media were also having to cope with the embarrassment caused by Mr. Eugene Hasenfus and the untimely descent of his plane into Southern Nicaragua. The title of this particular chapter in the history of news management is "The Smoking Gun That Does Not Smoke." The bottom-line question in the Hasenfus affair is, Did the Reagan administration break the law by supplying arms to the Nicaraguan contras?

Given the number of smoking guns littering the field of battle it is entirely clear that the administration did break the law, that Congress should hold hearings, that Reagan and Bush should be impeached, hounded from office, etc. etc. Eugene Hasenfus had been a CIA employee as had been his dead comrade in the plane; the organizer of the arms shipments to the contras from Ilopango airport in El Salvador had been in close contact with Vice President Bush and his staff; documents in the plane attested to many such illegal flights. These are all smoking guns. But they do not smoke. The news stories—three of them in one edition of the New York Times last week—creep near the truth with phrases like "would appear to contradict administration claims," or "possible technical infraction of congressional guidelines." It's as though Watergate had died away with Senator Sam Ervin telling reporters that although President Nixon would appear to have been in violation of the U.S. constitution, civil and criminal code, oath of office and will of congress, he was satisfied that in intention the President had been determined to act in full compliance with his commitments to the constitution and the American people. Hence the Smoking Gun That Does Not Smoke. It doesn't smoke because few in the mainstream press or in congress really want it to.

But then, as President Reagan knows very well, given enough time both press and congress will get used to anything. The administration has now entirely dispensed with the idea that aid to the contras is intended to "pressure" the Sandinistas to "reforms" or to a Contadora Treaty, with scarcely a murmur from the Democrats or from the editorial columns. The press is, increasingly, accepting contra attacks and atrocities as a fact of life. The contras, for example, have announced that they regard all public-transit busses in Nicaragua as legitimate targets since they are owned by the government. The consequent attacks upon and slaughter of civilians gets less and less coverage, so what we finally get is a series of war crimes organized and financed by the Reagan administration, invisible in the U.S. media. As a corrective, it's worth studying the remarks of the former three-term Costa Rican President Pepe Figueres, reported in COHA's "Washington Report on the Hemisphere": Figueres, "Nicaragua is an invaded country, a diseased country. The United States is making a catastrophic mistake by attempting to overthrow the Sandinistas by force. Giving the Contras millions of dollars is just making them corrupt. I would prefer the United States to let the Sandinistas finish drafting their new constitution and then call new elections. They should be allowed to finish what they started in peace; they deserve it. After all, the Sandinistas were elected as fairly as anyone else in Central America, except for in Costa Rica, where we have a real democratic tradition the other countries lack.

"To overthrow the Sandinistas the U.S. would have to send its own troops...Latin America would explode in protest, it would precipitate fifty years of bad relations between Washington and the Latin countries."

"Do you approve of the way the Sandinistas are running Nicaragua?"

Figueres: "All my life I fought against the Somoza dynasty because it was expansionist...and persistently interfered with our internal affairs (in Costa Rica)...they were accomplished torturers and villains...I am grateful to the Sandinistas for finally achieving their ouster. Now for the first time Nicaragua has a government that cares for its people. After the victory I would have preferred a different approach to government in Managua. I am a fervent democrat and favor an electoral system along with freedom of the press. I was very sorry they recently closed La Prensa but I also understand that Nicaragua is a nation at war, besieged by the United States and the regional oligarchies. When Somoza invaded Costa Rica in 1948 and again in 1955 we too established censorship of the press until the threat was over. As much as I disagree with the closing of La Prensa I understand why it happened..."

"There is still a surprising amount of support for the government. On my last visit to Nicaragua I met some incredibly wealthy families that to my surprise supported the Sandinistas. In this regard the U.S. government has displayed great misunderstanding and the more the U.S. tries to strangle the Nicaraguan government the more the intensely unified the people will become in their opposition to Washington."

Use, abuse focus of Alcohol Awareness Week

By CHERYL GRAHAM
of the Barometer

Yesterday marked the beginning of National Collegiate Alcohol (and Drug) Awareness Week. Since trivia is a national pastime, I feel justified in suggesting that the name is a misnomer. After all, college students are all too aware of alcohol.

Indeed, studies show that anywhere from 80 to 95 percent of college students drink at least occasionally and 10 to 20 percent of college drinkers are harmfully involved with alcohol.

I was painfully reminded of this involvement with alcohol by the end of the second week of classes when I had already been the problem is alcohol abuse.

There are many ways to define 'alcohol abuse,' but perhaps the simplest definition I know is use that results in negative consequences. (Of course, the next challenge is to achieve agreement about what constitutes negative consequences.)

A hangover is a good example of one. I don't know anyone who believes that a hangover is fun or even character-building. In fact, most people find hangovers so utterly repulsive that they quite naturally moderate their drinking in order to avoid them.

Yet, there remains a large number of people who regularly drink in such a fashion as to create this painful condition. No doubt in my mind, drinking that way is abusive.

The negative consequences of a hangover can be multiplied if it interferes with the next day's activities. Missing classes or failing to meet some other responsibility because of a hangover are examples.

It's not at all uncommon for students to get "wasted" on alcohol—nor is it uncommon for them to encourage each other to do so. I'll never forget the pictures in the 1985 Beaver yearbook with captions extolling the virtues of "fast and dirty" drinking games. Such games constitute the most blatant form of abuse: consumption in a potentially lethal manner.

That's right, potentially lethal. Alcohol depresses the central nervous system which controls various vital functions such as breathing, heart rate and blood pressure. In large doses, these functions can be anesthetized to the point of death. Rapid consumption can cause lethal anesthesia because it introduces a large dose of alcohol while the liver is capable of metabolizing only a small, fixed amount each hour (about three-quarters of an ounce of absolute alcohol).

Other negative consequences of alcohol use involve one's behavior while under the influence. A person who alienates others, destroys property, injures him or herself, operates a vehicle or vomits all over the carpet has abused alcohol.

Most people use alcohol at least once in such a manner as to experience some negative consequence. In fact, the negative consequence may be the avenue by which one learns what it means to drink safely and responsibly.

But those who use alcohol in such a way as to repeatedly experience negative consequences are among the 10 to 20 percent who have a problem worthy of professional attention. Professional help is available on campus at the Student Health Center or the Counseling Center.

Please take advantage of the activities scheduled Oct. 20-23 during National Collegiate Alcohol (and Drug) Awareness Week. They are listed daily in the Barometer Calendar or you can call the Student Health Center or Office of Student Services for a complete schedule.

The difficulty of seeing young lives being destroyed by a drug raises the temptation to simply say, "don't drink." But such advice merely suggests that the problem is alcohol, when in actuality

Too good to pass up

To the editor:

Some opportunities are too good to pass up. This was the unanimous thinking of the city council when it accepted the gift of the Majestic Theatre with the idea of turning it into a community theatre.

Corvallis citizens should be grateful to the donors who made the gift possible. Now all that is left to do is to pass the bond measure that would bring the building up to code and make it functional. The bond measure, 54, would cost approximately 3.8 cents per $1000 assessed value. In addition the city council passed a resolution preventing the doors of the Majestic to open until an operating endowment fund is raised. This is to make sure that the theatre does not become an excessive drain on city resources.

The Majestic Theatre was a wonderful gift. Its renovation and operation has been thoughtfully and frugally planned. It deserves your support.

City Councilor, Ward 2

NRA endorses Paulus

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) — The National Rifle Association endorsed Republican Norma Paulus over Democrat Neil Goldschmidt in the race for governor of Oregon.

The NRA announced its endorsement of Paulus in a letter mailed Tuesday to its 49,000 Oregon members.

The NRA said Paulus had shown support for the right to keep and bear arms, while questioning Goldschmidt's past support of bans on some firearms.

The group based its endorsement on questionnaires answered by both candidates.

"Although a favorable questionnaire has been submitted by Goldschmidt, his past actions as mayor and a member of the U.S. Conference of Mayors leaves doubt as to his true position on the firearms issues," the association said.

The NRA said that while Goldschmidt was mayor of Portland from 1972 to 1979 he sent a letter to constituents indicating he would support bans on some firearms and as a member of the mayors' conference did nothing to overturn the organization's "anti-gun" positions.

Paulus also picked up the endorsement of the 800-member Associated Oregon Loggers.

Roy Zimbrick, chairman of the association's political action committee, said the endorsement was based on Paulus's knowledge of the timber industry and its problems.

While secretary of state in 1985, Paulus released an audit of the AOL, which accused then-president F.F. "Monte" Montgomery of diverting State Accident Insurance Fund dividends due policy holders to shore up a competing insurance company established by the AOL.

The audit triggered an investigation by the Lane County District Attorney's Office. Montgomery, a former speaker of the Oregon House, was eventually indicted and found guilty of six counts of theft.

Microbiologist talks on genes

Microbiologist Dennis Hruby will talk to OSU alumni before the OSU-Boise State football game Saturday in the second in a series of "Before the Play-by-Play" seminars.

Hruby, assistant professor of microbiology at OSU, will discuss "Gene Research at OSU." His talk will be during an 11:30 a.m. lunch in the LaSells Stewart Center across the street from Parker Stadium.

A similar lunch-seminar was held earlier this fall before the Stanford football game and another is planned Nov. 22 before the Oregon game. The programs are sponsored by the OSU Alumni Association.

Cost of the "Before the Play-by-Play" program is $6 per person, which includes lunch. Reservations are required.

Alumni wishing to attend should call the LaSells Stewart Center, 754-2402, or mail checks to "Before the Play-by-Play," LaSells Stewart Center, 26th and Western Boulevard, Corvallis, 97331-3102.

Then get in on the ground floor in our Platoon Leaders Class program for college freshmen, sophomores and juniors. You could start planning on a career like the men in this ad have. And also have some great advantages like:

- Earning $100 a month during the school year
- As a freshman or sophomore, you could complete your basic training during two six-week summer sessions and earn more than $1200 during each session
- Juniors earn more than $2100 during one ten-week summer session

■ Seniors and graduates can be commissioned through the Officer Candidate Class Program

- You can take free civilian flying lessons
- You're commissioned upon graduation

If you're looking to move up quickly, look into the Marine Corps' commissioning programs. You could start off making more than $18,000 a year.

We're looking for a few good men.

Science day set

OSU hopes to attract about 2,000 high school students, alumni, parents and teachers to learn more about the university on "All Sciences Day" on Oct. 25.

This event, formerly called Ag Sciences Day, was expanded this year to include the colleges of science, home economics and veterinary medicine. Any student interested in science-related activities can attend open houses to find out more about OSU and its programs.

"With our expanded format this year, we expect more than twice the participation we've had in the past," said John Buckhouse, acting director and head adviser of the College of Agricultural Sciences. "The day is supposed to be both fun and educational. It will include a barbecue lunch, the OSU-Boise State football game, and a chance for students to explore many different fields of study that might be of interest to them."

According to Buckhouse, the college open houses will be conducted by student clubs "to provide more of a student perspective on the research, teaching and activities that are available."

For students, the fee to attend All Sciences Day is $4, plus $2 for the football game. For parents, the fee is $5.50, plus $9 for the football game. Registration can be made by calling 754-2211, or writing All Sciences Day, 137 Strand Agricultural Hall, Corvallis, OR 97331.

Charter day events scheduled

OSU will celebrate its 118th birthday this week by honoring the anniversary of its official charter date: Oct. 27, 1868.

OSU will observe Charter Day with a series of events from Oct. 23-28.

Included are campus tours, open houses, luncheons, speakers and a reception. The latter will honor 346 staff members who have reached milestones in their career in terms of years of service.

The reception, honoring employees who have marked 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 40 years of service to OSU, will be held Thursday, Oct. 23, in Memorial Union 109 from 3-5 p.m.

A series of walking tours will be offered to the public on Friday, Oct. 24, from 3-5 p.m. Participants will gather in the MU Concourse, then split up for one of three tours.

A tour of the north campus will include visits to the pilot plant wine facility; the Nuclear Reactor and Radiation Center; and the forestry sciences lab.

A tour of the east campus will include visits to the Communications Media Center; Mitchell Playhouse; and the student broadcast media center of OSU, KBVR TV and radio.

On Monday, Oct. 27, OSU faculty researchers who were awarded patents will be honored during a luncheon at noon in Snell Forum. Reservations are required for the lunch, which is priced at $4.65 per person. Interested persons may call 754-3733 for reservations.

Following the luncheon, a panel discussion chaired by OSU President John Byrne will analyze "Research, Patents and Technology Transfer: New Oregon Programs." Other panelists include George Keller, vice president for research and graduate studies; Kim Smith, OSU patent manager; and Robert McQuate, executive director of the Advanced Science and Technology Development Corporation.

William "Bud" Davis, chancellor of the Oregon State System of Higher Education, will speak at the Corvallis Chamber of Commerce luncheon on Tuesday, Oct. 28, at Nendel's Inn. The topic of Davis' address will be the role of OSU in Corvallis and the region.

Reservations for the chamber luncheon may be made by calling 757-1505.

DeFazio, Long battle it out for 4th district seat

SALEM (UPI) — A hotly contested race for Oregon's open 4th District leads the list of general election battles between Democrats and Republicans in the state's five congressional districts.

Democrat Peter DeFazio and Republican Bruce Long are running for the seat left vacant when six-term Democratic incumbent Jim Weaver decided to run for the U.S. Senate and later bowed out of the race.

DeFazio, a Lane County commissioner, is a former aide to Weaver and would carry on the Weaver tradition of liberalism in a district with heavy Democratic registration and an economy based on timber, tourism and fishing.

Long, a Douglas County commissioner, is a conservative who lost to Weaver in 1982 and is being heavily backed by national Republican money eager to pick off an open seat.

In the other congressional races:

— 1st District: Six-term Democratic incumbent Les AuCoin of Forest Grove is being challenged by state Sen. Tony Meeker of Amity.

— 2nd District: Two-term Republican Bob Smith, a Burns rancher, is running against Larry Tuttle, a Deschutes County commissioner from Redmond.

— 3rd District: Three-term Democratic incumbent Ron Wyden of Portland faces Republican Tom Phelan of Portland.

— 5th District: Republican Denny Smith, who was elected to Congress in 1980 from the 2nd District and then moved into the newly created 5th District in 1982, is being challenged by Benton County Commissioner Barbara Ross of Corvallis.

DeFazio, 29, was a congressional aide to Weaver before being elected county commissioner in 1982 and owes much of his political upbringing to the congressman.

The ties to Weaver have helped him in the liberal enclaves in the largely blue-collar district, but have caused problems with the business community, which traditionally opposed Weaver each election year.

Long, 42, has strong ties to the business community and worked hard to gain early support from the timber industry. He opposes abortion, supports President Reagan's "Star Wars" plan and providing aid to U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels.

In the 1st District, AuCoin has successfully turned back heavily financed Republican challenges in each of his five re-election campaigns, but in Meeker he faces a candidate with a strong background in the Oregon Legislature.

AuCoin, 42, has used his seat on the House appropriations defense subcommittee to oppose funding for the MX missile and Star Wars and push for arms control, while working to help the district's electronics industry and get a new federal prison near Sheridan.

Meeker, 47, runs his family's feed and seed business and has been in the state legislature for 18 years, rising to Senate Republican leader and engineering a comeback in the number of GOP members in the Senate. Politically savvy and a tough inside negotiator, Meeker earned high marks for helping get a stalled sales tax proposal out of the 1985 Legislature.

In the Second District, Bob Smith, 55, has the added advantage this year of a seat on the House Agriculture Committee in a vast eastern Oregon district dominated by farms and forests.

Starker forestry lectures set

The second annual Starker Lectures at OSU this fall will include topics ranging from forest science to forest politics, a close look at the multiple use of forests and the issue of Canadian timber competition.

Four highly respected experts in forestry issues will speak during this program, entitled "Forests of the Northwest: A Time for Reflection." Each lecture is free and open to the public, and will begin at 4 p.m. in Stewart Auditorium, located in Peavy Hall.

"For this year's lecture series, we want to take stock of where we've been and where we're going in forestry," said Bob Buckman of OSU's College of Forestry. "The national forest land management plans are nearing completion, forest industries face an uncertain future, and there is considerable conflict in the Pacific Northwest between various interest groups. These uncertainties need to be explored."

The lecture program will begin Oct. 23 with a presentation by Richard Waring, a professor of ecology at OSU, on how to separate the scientific foundation of forestry from social and other value judgments.

F.L.C. Reed, a former head of the Canadian Forestry Service, will explore, on Nov. 6, the problems of Canadian forestry and the interaction of that industry with the United States. Reed will discuss the particular problems that forestry faces in Canada, including concerns that Canada may be using its timber resources faster than they are being replenished. He will also discuss tariffs and Canadian competition with U.S. forest products.

The theory and practice of multiple use of forests will be analyzed by John Krutilla on Nov. 20. Krutilla has conducted extensive research on multiple use, as well as water resource development and environmental issues.

The lecture series will conclude Dec. 4 with a presentation by Jerry Miles, who has a long background as a budget officer and administrator in several federal agencies, including the departments of agriculture and energy. Miles will discuss the shifting political environment and processes that relate to forestry issues.

The Starker Lectures are supported by an annual grant in memory of T.J. and Bruce Starker, formerly prominent figures in the Oregon forest industry.

Court rules measure 9 legal

SALEM (UPI) — A property tax limitation ballot measure does not violate a constitutional requirement that measures deal with only one subject, the Oregon Supreme Court ruled Tuesday.

The ruling rejects a challenge by the Oregon Education Association to Measure 9, which would limit property taxes to 1.5 percent of assessed value.

The ruling modifies a decision by Marion County Circuit Judge Val D. Sloper which ordered Secretary of State Barbara Roberts to review the measure for compliance with the one-subject rule.

Had the court ruled in favor of the OEA, Roberts would have been required to rule on the constitutionality of the measure before the Nov. 4 general election.

Measure 9 is sponsored by Ray Phillips and Oregon Taxpayers United and is the fifth consecutive general election that a 1.5 percent limitation has been on the ballot in Oregon. The measure has failed each election year since 1978.

The OEA opposes the measure and has sponsored a competing initiative, Measure 7, that would lower property taxes by creating a 5 percent state sales tax.

The court rejected OEA's arguments that Measure 9 contains provisions not connected to property taxes, including a clause that limits school election dates.

In rejecting the challenge, the court cited cases in other states in which courts gave a broad interpretation to the term "one subject."

Justice Hans Linde and Michael Gillette agreed with the opinion, but stated it is "doubtful" Measure 9 qualifies for the ballot because of separate provisions limiting increased assessments, putting a ceiling on tax rates and shifting from the current dollar-based limitation to a rate-based limitation.

While going along with the majority, Linde and Gillette urged clarification of term "one subject."

Hurricanes hold top spot in polls

by United Press International

Miami, following a 45-13 romp over Cincinnati, retained its No. 1 ranking Monday and two Top 20 teams dropped after narrow losses, in voting by the UPI Board of Coaches.

Hurricanes quarterback Vinny Testaverde, the nation's top-rated passer, sprained his right foot but still threw for 262 yards and two touchdowns in leading Miami, 7-0, to the easy victory.

The Hurricanes received 47 of 50 first-place votes and totaled 743 out of a possible 750 points, easily outdistancing No. 2 Alabama. The Crimson Tide earned the remaining first-place votes and had 663 points.

Completing the top 10 were No. 3 Nebraska, No. 4 Michigan, No. 5 Penn State, No. 6 Oklahoma, No. 7 Auburn, No. 8 Washington, No. 9 Arizona State and No. 10 Texas A&M.

Louisiana State moved up a spot to No. 11, followed by No. 12 Iowa, No. 13 Arkansas, No. 14 Mississippi State, No. 15 Arizona, No. 16 Clemson, co-No. 17s UCLA and Stanford, No. 19 North Carolina State and co-No. 20s Baylor and North Carolina.

Iowa and North Carolina dropped narrow decisions over the weekend and fell in the ratings.

The Hawkeyes were defeated 20-17 by Michigan on Mike Gillette's 34-yard field goal as time expired and slipped four spots from No. 8.

North Carolina's Tar Heels, 4-1-1, scored with eight seconds remaining on a pass from Mark Maye to Quint Smith, but missed the two-point conversion and lost 35-34 to North Carolina State. The Tar Heels fell three places from last week's No. 17 ranking.

Co-No. 20 Baylor, 4-3, maintained its ranking despite blowing a 17-0 lead against Texas A&M and losing 31-30. Aggies quarterback Kevin Murray completed 25 of 40 passes for 308 yards and three TDs. The Bears have lost three straight games.

"I still feel very strongly about this football team," Baylor Coach Grant Teaff said. "I don't think this team will let down now. They still have so much to play for. They have accomplished a lot this season and I believe that they don't want anything to take away from that fact."

"I am not in any way disappointed in them, just for them. I don't know what else I could have asked them to do last week."

The Pacific 10, with five members in the Top 20, had the largest contingent of any conference.

Re-entering the Top 20 this week after falling out last week were North Carolina State and Stanford. Southern Cal was the only team to drop out.

"It's still too early to be concerned about those sort of things (the ratings)," N.C. State Coach Dick Sheridan said. "For a team and coaches to be able to concentrate on the task at hand is one of the single most important factors in being consistent. I would like to think that, by the end of the year, we have the type of team that is attractive to bowl people."

OSU offense needs to score

By RICH PETERSON
Sports Editor

Just glancing at offensive statistics for the OSU football team, you would think that coach Dave Kragthorpe would be very pleased with the results.

But there is a crucial element missing from the Beaver offense. It has been the concern of Kragthorpe since the beginning of this season—and it shows on the scoreboard. "We're concerned that we are not getting into the end zone," said Kragthorpe.

"We move the ball up and down the field, but we don't score touchdowns," said Kragthorpe. Even though the Beavers stand 1-5, nothing can be taken away from quarterback Erik Wilhelm.

He now leads the NCAA with 26.8 completions per game and is 14th in the nation in total offense at 234.7.

Kragthorpe explained that the overall offensive situation is improving. The Beavers are completing 65 percent of the passes, which is to be expected when making short passes.

"Not taking anything away from Erik, but with the passes we make, we should complete over 60 percent of them," said Kragthorpe. "But, overall offensively we are making a lot of progress."

Too much like the others: Kragthorpe was happy the Beavers beat the point spread in the 23-12 loss at Arizona. "But, frankly it is getting to be too typical," said Kragthorpe. It was the third Top 20 team in six starts, but also another game in which the Beavers were competitive right to the end and still lost.

"They've all been the same. We came out there and could have won," said Kragthorpe.

Underdogs, so what? Let's face it, the Beavers need to find a way to win. Kragthorpe says the mental aspect is the tough one to beat. "There is an element of our team that is thinking we're the underdog," said Kragthorpe. "It's a tough situation because you get into the game and haven't prepared your mind to win."

The Beavers have been underdogs in every game this season, but many times have made the gamblers worry. Every game except Fresno State, OSU had a good chance of putting in the "W" column. Despite the game, the old cliché says, "You have to prepare to win on Monday." "The big play comes and we tense up a little," said Kragthorpe on game preparation.

The big plays: Do the Beavers, a team that stresses the short high percentage pass, practice the bomb? "We stress that everyday," said Kragthorpe. "All we need is a couple of them (to win games)." But it is not that easy for the Beavers to make longer passes, because the opponent already knows OSU plans to keep the ball in the air. "It is tough in our offense (to make a big play) because we pass the ball so much, that the other teams lay off," said Kragthorpe.

WSU cherishes win: The scoreboard at Washington State's Martin Stadium did some heavy duty work last week after a 34-14 over Southern California on Oct. 11. The following message, along with the score, was put on the scoreboard and left for two days: "OCT. 11, 1986...HISTORY HAS CHANGED!!!...COUGARS WHIP TROJANS!!!"

Pac-10 honors: Stanford fullback Brad Muster and Arizona State linebacker Greg Clark were named Pac-10 conference Players of the Week Monday.

Muster had three receptions for 35 yards and one touchdown, and rushed 25 times for 151 yards and another two touchdowns, as the Cardinal beat Oregon 41-7. The junior is now the second-leading rusher in Stanford history behind Darrin Nelson.

Clark helped the Sun Devils defeat USC, 29-20, in a conference game. The junior had 18 tackles, including seven unassisted.

A little volleyball: OSU's Carol Sears is eighth in the Pac-10 in assist average with 8.44 per game and in ace average with 0.41. Tami Good is fifth in block average at 1.24 in 50 games. Next up for the Beavers is Portland State tonight at 7:30 in Gill Coliseum. OSU will be looking for revenge on the NCAA II national champs after a loss to the Vikings in Portland on Oct. 10. Four Pac-10 teams are ranked in last weeks' Top 20 poll.

OSU Rugby to host tournament

Saturday, Oct. 25 the OSU Rugby Club is sponsoring the fourth annual Beaver Classic Rugby Tournament. The tournament will include a total of 14 teams such as: Humboldt State, Reed College, Portland Pigs and University of Oregon.

Favored to win the tournament this year is the OSU squad. After coming back from a month in the United Kingdom, the OSU team is undefeated.

"Our backs can run on anybody," said OSU coach Mark Webber. "Our back line this year, with Kelvin Wong and Jeff Montgomery, is our best ever. I don't think anyone can shut us down."

The tournament will start at 9:00 a.m. on Peavy Field. The championship will be held at approximately 3:30 p.m. The Rugby Club is hosting a dance after the tournament at Willamette Grange starting at 7:30 p.m.

Water Polo unbeaten

Despite being short-manned, the Oregon State Water Polo Club is off to a 6-0 start after winning a tournament in Portland last weekend.

The Beavers don't have a full roster yet, but defeated five teams to claim the tournament championship. On Saturday OSU beat Portland State, 21-12; Central Washington, 12-5 and University of Washington 20-12. Sunday the Beavers got by Washington State 10-9 and Whitman 16-4.

The Beavers beat Portland State last week 13-8 at Oregon State. The Beavers will get their fourth look at the Vikings when they travel to PSU next Tuesday. "Portland State has been our toughest opponent in the past, but this year we are on top of our game early," said OSU's Jeff Grandy.

The Beavers will host their own tournament on Nov. 8-9 at Langton Pool.
