Fact, fallacy and fable

After three terms of writing this column, I must announce that this will be the last installment. To some of you I'm sure that comes as a relief. I'll be writing an abridged form for the summer term Baro, so don't be overly re-

This column has been a pleasure to write. I've been able to say what I want, brag, scold and praise as I please. It's a privilege I hate to give up. At the same time I have learned from you and your reactions to some of the things I have written. In most cases, I think, you have agreed. Once in a while you have told me where to get off; it's those times that have proved the most beneficial for me.

Rad Dewey, last year's Barometer editor, once told me, If you want to stir up controversy, just write your column off the top of your head." That's just about what Rad did, too. I disagreed with him then and I disagree with him now. You see don't think it's necessary to stir up controversy just for the sake of debate. It's too easy to look at one side of a matter and present that argument with vigorous abandon, while neglecting the other side. Often, I think, when the other side is investigated one finds that there is really no argument. So why argue?

But I have written this column off the top of my head. It becomes a necessity because of the time involved. A finished column involves five to six typewritten pages. The first one l wrote took me about five and one half hours to write. This one will take me a maximum of an hour and a half. I suppose with a little more experience and improved typing skills, I could whip a column out in less than a half-hour. It isn't unusual for a professional journalist. But then I'll never be one

One of the most entertaining letters I've ever seen came from a buddy of a buddy of mine the other day. Actually the buddy of the buddy is a buddy of mine too, so I was able to swipe the letter without my conscience hurting much. The fellow that wrote the letter graduated from OSU earlier in the school year and is now living in an Eastern Oregon
