Student Conduct

The University of Oregon Student Conduct Committee Friday referred to the Student Court the cases of ten students who have been cited on charges stemming from disruption of recruiting by Weyerhaeuser Co. on the campus this week.

The referral will postpone a hearing on the matter, which had been scheduled for Monday, the Dean of Students office reported.

The Committee is an appeals body to which cases from the Student Court can be taken. On some occasions cases may be taken directly to the committee, but in the meeting Friday the committee ruled that the cases must first go to the court so the right of appeal to the committee could be maintained.

The dean of students office said new charges will have to be filed with the court and three days notice given to the defendants. The office estimated that the court would probably hear the cases within a week.
