A total of 17 students have been cited to the University of Oregon's student court to face charges stemming from the alleged disruption of Weyerhaeuser's recruiting efforts on campus last week, announced the Office of Student Services.

This number includes 10 individuals previously cited last week, according to Richard Rapp, assistant dean of students.

The student court has set a public hearing for Monday, February 16, at 3:30 p.m., to hear procedural motions. It will be held in the Dad's Room of the Erb Memorial Union. After the procedural motions are ruled on, hearing dates on individual charges will be set.
