Time Out for Survival

Events scheduled at the University of Oregon April 21-24, as part of a nationwide teach-in on problems of the environment, were announced Friday morning by Bob Greene, administrative assistant of the Associated Students of the University of Oregon.

The teach-in, called "Time Out for Survival", is sponsored by the ASUO Survival Center.

The idea of an environmental teach-in originated with several U.S. senators. Students at some 3,000 high schools and 1,000 colleges across the country are expected to participate.

The following is the schedule for Time Out for Survival at the UO. All events are open to the public, at no charge.
