DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The U.S. Custom House is situated on the east side of the North Park Blocks in downtown Portland. The building was designed in 1897 by James Knox Taylor, Supervising Architect of the U.S. Treasury. It was completed in 1901 under supervision of Portland architect Edgar Lazarus.

The large, three-story building has an H-shaped plan with four-story blocks with pyramidal roofs at the center of north and south wings. On the west face, a loggia opens onto 8th Avenue and the Park Blocks beyond. The ground story is of rusticated granite. The second and third stories are faced with buff-colored pressed brick which also forms the quoining detail at the corners. Window frame-ments are somewhat manneristic, being composed of molded terra cotta panels contain- ing symbols of the professions and other ornament. Window arch heads are flat and pedimented, and those at the second story level have hooded lintels. Round- arched openings in the rusticated ground story have radiating voussoirs. A classical entablature and attic screen a shallow hipped roof.

Interior details include a grand staircase, cast-iron balustrades, brass fittings and oak paneling. Original plans show that the building had been intended to house courtrooms, spaces which were modified at the outset. The courtrooms were to have comprised the upper stories of the tower blocks. Other interior spaces have been partitioned for office use, and the ceilings have been lowered in intervening years. Subsequent remodelings also have done away with a central court light well.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The U.S. Custom House, erected at the turn of the century, is a notable example in Oregon of traditional architecture in which considerable regard for accuracy in historical detail is shown. The building is symbolic of the period during which Portland was the major port of entry for the region.

James Knox Taylor served as Supervising Architect of the U.S. Treasury between 1897 and 1912. He was born in Knoxville, Illinois, and was educated in St. Paul, Minnesota public schools. He completed a two-year course in architecture at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and later worked in offices in Boston and New York. In New York he was associated with Cass Gilbert for a time. Returning to St. Paul in 1882, Taylor resumed practice, subsequently moving to Philadelphia in 1892 and to Washington, D.C., in 1895. In Washington he entered the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury as senior draftsman and succeeded to the preeminent position in 1897.

Edgar M. Lazarus is a figure of some importance in the architectural history of Oregon. It was he who designed Vista House at Crown Point, the state's only public building in the Jugendstil style, and the Agricultural Palace for the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition, which is no longer extant. The observation building at Crown Point overlooking the Columbia River Gorge was constructed between 1916 and 1918; the Agricultural Palace was opened for use in 1905. Lazarus also had a hand in the Ainsworth Building in Portland and designed several homes for prominent Portlanders.

Lazarus was born in Baltimore, Maryland in 1868. In 1894 he arrived in Portland where he resided until his death in 1939. He was for a time a member of the architectural firm of Whitehouse and Fouilhoux. He was elected a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects and served as President of the Oregon Chapter AIA.

The U.S. Custom House has housed various federal offices over the years. Its principal tenant at the present time is the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Through its scale and quality of design, the building stabilizes and enhances its neighborhood, serving as an anchor on the margin of the North Park Blocks.

On May 6, 1970, the Portland City Council, upon the recommendation of the Portland Historic Landmarks Commission, designated the U.S. Custom House an Historic Landmark.

While structurally sound, the building is expected to be declared surplus by the General Services Administration. The Portland Historic Landmarks Commission expressed its hope to GSA that the federal government would continue to use and maintain the property, citing as an alternative transfer of surplus historic federal buildings to states and cities for revenue producing purposes.
