

Suggestions for Tea Chapter.

Tell the legend of the tea plant. It is easier to understand the ceremonial if we know that tea drinking began as a sort of religious rite. Also a word or so on kinds of tea, strength, how brewed, etc., would not come amiss.

Do you bring in a Tea-basket?

What kind of cups? big, little, handles or not? Saucers?

How many cups should one drink?

Would Dr. Johnson who drank 16, be considered very rude, or very appreciative?

What do you serve with tea? (No sugar or cream or lemon I suppose)

If you are giving the tea, would it be good taste to serve little hot cakes, or cinnamon toast or anything of the things we do serve with tea?

Do the Japanese drink coffee?

If so, how, when, etc.,

Is tea served with all meals?

Do they ever use a tea-ball? Should you in entertaining? Or the spoon, with fresh tea for each cup?

What is their favorite tea? green, black, or the Uncolored Japan with which we are familiar?

Anything else you can think of!

Suggestions for Tea Chapter.

Tell the legend of the tea plant. It is easier to understand the ceremonial if we know that tea drinking began as a sort of religious rite. Also a word or so on kinds of tea, strength, how brewed, etc., would not come amiss.
Do you bring in a tea-basket?
What kind of cups? big, little, handles or not? Saucers?
How many cups should one drink?
Would Dr. Johnson who drank 18, be considered very rude, or very appreciative?
What do you serve with tea? (No sugar or cream or lemon I suppose. If you are giving the tea, would it be good taste to serve it with the hot cakes, or cinnamon toast or anything of the things we do serve with tea?

Do the Japanese drink coffee?
If so, how, when, etc.,

Is tea served with all meals?
Do they ever use a tea-pail? Should you be entertaining? Or the spoon, with fresh tea for each cup?
What is their favorite tea? green, black, or the Uncolored Japan with which we are familiar?
Anything else you can think of!