My dear Perkins:

We arrived here in Los Angeles after a very comfortable journey and we found George at the station with his Ford car. He is looking well and seemed in very good spirits. We are leaving for Eugene on Sunday, so as to get back on our round trip tickets, which are good only to the end of this month.

When I handed you that letter of Sam's containing a copy of a report of Moody's, I had for the time being forgotten that I had once heard that one should not pass the ^{written} ~~information~~ information on. If I am wrong, please let me know. We of course do not want to get mixed up in any unpleasant or undesirable circumstances due possibly to my carelessness.

I received the check book with the little note and thank you very much.

Your affectionate cousin,
