

Wild Life Lines

Oregonian

11-15-31

Edited by
James H. McCool

1—Elk in Wallowa lake, eastern Oregon. Photo by Oregon state game commission. 2—California bush-tit snapped while feeding her young. Photo by William L. Finley. 3—B. B. Thurber, Portland, found this squirrel in his skillet when he was making a camping trip between Crater and Diamond lakes. 4—This old photograph, contributed by Katie J. Bedinger, Vancouver, Wash., shows a team of seven-year-old buffalo bulls, one of which was the celebrated "Luc ky Knight," captured by C. J. (Buffalo) Jones. The wild buffalo above were the first to be harnessed. The buffalo with the large knobs (Devlish Dick) had killed A. H. Cole, Oxford, Neb. Mr. Cole, in endeavoring to keep Dick and a domestic bull from fighting, turned his back to get a pitchfork. Devlish Dick then gored him. Buffalo Jones later broke the animal to harness and drove the pair above with as much pleasure as if they had been carriage horses. 5—This remarkable photograph of two mountain goats was taken by William L. Finley, Portland naturalist.