EAST HEARS W. L. FINLEY Interest Shown in Bird and Animal Life of West Coast.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.-(Special.)-Much interest in the bird and animal life of the Pacific northwest has been shown by audiences in New York and other eastern states who have heard William L. Finley of Portland in his illustrated lectures this season. Mr. Finley is lecturing in and near New York city this week. The latest honor to be awarded him on this trip is his election to the vice-presidency of the game conference of the American Nature association. Mr. Finley attended the recent annual meeting of the association in this city and showed his new pictures of the Pacific northwest, British Columbia and Alaska, which won many compliments for the naturalist and for the western country.

Mrs. Finley and their daughter.

Phoebe Katherine, will join Dr. Finley in New York for the holidays, returning to the Pacific coast by way of the Panama canal. After speaking Dr. Finley will lecture in the southern states and Texas and join his wife and daughter in California.

DON Q. 1925-1932 Dec. 1932

Don Q. has passed away. Known to thousands in person or in picture, this jaunty little California quail, whose whole life has been spent with human beings, died in the home that he has shared for seven and onehalf years with William L. Finley and his family at Jennings Lodge, Oregon, on October 13. His life was a unique and happy one. Lost from his mother when but a day or two old, he was nurtured to full quailhood by the Finleys. He has travelled from Oregon to Princeton, New Jersey, and back again. Now he has gone to that place where good animals go to join the mother he scarcely knew. Mr. Finley writes:

"For some time he has had a large tumor growing on the upper part of his leg. We tried a doctor, but he couldn't seem to do anything to help. We let him out in the garden each morning. He always stayed around in one place and answered every time we called him. About five o'clock last evening, when I went out to get him, he didn't answer and I looked in his accustomed place and he had passed away. His feathers were all smooth and he apparently hadn't struggled any. He must have suffered some during his sickness, but he never showed it, always being cheerful, although he had great difficulty in walking. It's sad to have him go, as he was a wonderful pet."

So no longer will Don Q. fight shiny tan shoes. No longer will he roost atop the curtain rod in the Finley study. No longer will he roam the Finley yard and sleep in his comfortable little house by the French doors. He will be missed, as all those we love and understand are missed. But he leaves behind the memory of a friendship between man and a wildling that is rich in beauty and significance. May you rest in peace, Don Q.
