Murray did not get on as well as Samby on the train. He was very much excited and would not keep his head inside his berth and go to sleep. Later he got very cold and Helen got in bed with him. At first he was very glad to have her, because she warmed him up, but later he kicked her in the stomach in his sleep and yelled, "Get out!"

My office in the law school is still a mess. The desk, etc., that have been ordered for me have not yet arrived. I have two chairs and a very small table. My books are all over the floor and the mess is looking steadily worse. But my work in getting my courses into shape is coming on well and I expect to finish outlining my work for the year in two more days.

Samby has your love for travel. He likes to be moved from room to room so as to have new scenery to view.

Stocks have been booming steadily. Our securities are now worth over $365,000 as against $265,000 last May. Your interest is over $30,000, tho I have not calculated this year the proportion of the whole to which you are entitled and so do not know exactly what it is.

Please excuse me for not writing you a longer and better letter, but I have been working hard and am tired.

Remember that you are going to stop off on your way west.

*With lots of love
