

September 20, 1929

Eugene, Oregon

My dear Sam:

Ever since I have been here I have been trying to write to you. At the end of a certain amount of activity my push gives out. As a matter of fact I have been working all day and every evening since I have been here. The days are growing alarmingly few between now and October 5. However, I say to myself that the things that must be done will be done and the rest will wait six months.

I am taking about twentyfive paintings with me; listing them, having them photographed, and packing them. It is astonishing how hard it is to take the proper care of these silk paintings. I roll them myself, and unroll them myself, which is both difficult and fatiguing as they have to be rolled straight and tight.

I am wondering where my mother will decide to go this coming winter. I have been told that in spite of the mild climate she could not be induced to get out much last winter. Probably that was because of the epidemic and the conditions being different another year that will not affect her.

Please keep well and happy while I am away.

Your loving ~~sister~~

September 30, 1923

Prague, Oregon

My dear Sam:

Ever since I have been here I have been trying to write to you. At the end of a certain amount of activity my pen gives out. As a matter of fact I have been working all day and every evening since I have been here. The days are growing alarmingly few between now and October 5. However, I say to myself that the things that must be done will be done and the rest will wait six months.

I am taking about twenty-five paintings with me; listing them, having them photographed, and packing them. It is astonishing how hard it is to take the proper care of these silk paintings. I roll them myself, and unroll them myself, which is both difficult and fatiguing as they have to be rolled straight and tight.

I am wondering where my mother will decide to go this coming winter. I have been told that in spite of the mild climate she could not be induced to get out much last winter. Probably that was because of the epidemic and the conditions being different another year that will not affect her.

Please keep well and happy while I am away.

Your loving sister,

