INTRODUCTION

The manuscript collections described in this checklist are a valuable historical resource on missionary activities and the social, political, and cultural events of the countries in which the missionaries served. Their observations and experiences are recorded in the correspondence, journals, diaries, reports, publications, manuscripts, and photographs contained in these collections.

While the majority of the missionaries represented served in China, others carried out their mission work in Japan, Korea, India, the Middle East, South America, and Africa. Many were teachers, nurses or doctors, as well as evangelists, and they professed various denominations, including Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Congregational. Women made up a large portion of the mission work force, either as individuals or with their husbands, and it was they who were more often better at writing letters and keeping journals.

I would like to acknowledge Scott Clark for his assistance in compiling this checklist which serves to bring together in one place brief descriptions of the nearly 100 missionary collections housed and preserved in Special Collections of the Knight Library at the University of Oregon. Each description includes the missionary's name, his or her birth and death dates when available, the form of the collection and inclusive dates of the materials, the size of the collection, the denomination of the missionary, and the country where the missionary served. Those entries with an asterisk (*) are more fully described in individual inventories available from Special Collections.

Researchers are welcome to use the collections but are encouraged to write or call in advance to ensure access. Special Collections is open weekdays, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., closing at 4:00 on Mondays. The Curator of Manuscripts also responds to written questions about the holdings from researchers unable to travel to Eugene. Although unique materials are not available on loan, copies of selected items usually may be ordered.
