ASK THE DRUGGIST!

The druggist is the unofficial information bureau of his community. He has come to be depended upon to answer questions as reliably as he fills prescriptions. This unique position of public informant is at once an opportunity and a challenge. It has caused the corner drug store to become the most popular spot along the street—the “pulse” of the business district. But it carries with it a responsibility. The druggist must keep posted. He must stock up on information just as surely as he stocks his shelves with merchandise. Young people—parents—college graduates—just to mention a few of those most likely to seek information about the state college. How is the druggist to answer them? Through the newspaper? No. That is too indirect. By writing? No. Such a method would be far too complex and time consuming. “THE OREGON STATE MONTHLY” is the surest source from which to keep in touch with the college in its many aspects—scientific developments; administration; sports; and alumni news. A few minutes reading each month will give the corner druggist all the information he is likely to be asked to furnish.

AN OPEN LETTER

To Every Person Who Has Ever Attended
O. S. C.

THERE has been some question in the past as to whether or not those students not completing the regular four year course were entitled to membership and participation in the Alumni association. I wish emphatically to state that they are welcome members of the association. The constitution of the association makes specific provision for the situation, as may be seen in the following excerpt from Article II:

"Any graduate or person who has been in attendance in any department of the College for a period not less than one year may become a member on payment of the regular assessment, provided he has discontinued his work at the College. Any person who has been in attendance at the College for less than one year, and has discontinued his work at the College may become eligible to membership upon the approval by the alumni board of his or her application."

Many of those who have completed courses shorter than the regular four year degree courses or who have been compelled to give up their work before completing their course have been among the most outstanding members of the alumni association.

"The object of the association shall be to upbuild the general welfare of our members; to give to the community what the College has given us; and by united effort, to promote all the interests of the Oregon State Agricultural College, the State and the Nation."

This statement from an earlier section of the constitution of the association accentuates the thought that loyalty to the college and devotion to its principles are the primary requirements for membership. The length of time necessary to catch this spirit is not to be measured in semesters or scholastic degrees.

—E. C. Allworth,
Alumni Secretary.

The courageous and straight-forward manner in which President W. J. Kerr successfully defended the college in the recent higher education controversy should strike pride in the heart of every alumnus of Oregon State. His unerring judgment, determined purpose, and un-failing devotion have never been more graphically exemplified.

OREGON STATE MONTHLY

On! Oregon State

NOW that the upheaval has subsided and the disrupted surface of higher education in Oregon has settled into the semblance of its former stability, a glance in retrospect may be pardoned over the devastated area of the Federal Survey proposals, the Governor's veto of $500,000, and the Referendum of $1,181,173. All of these shook Oregon higher education like an earthquake.

The Governor's veto of half a million dollars of the legislative appropriation for higher education was a defensive gesture to ward off the referendum; but in the eleventh hour it could not avert the blow. The institutions have had to get along on the millage taxes and other sources of income without a dollar of the appropriations provided by the last legislature. Only about $250,000 of these appropriations were for the College, yet the institution has had to shoulder more than twice that amount in taking up the losses due to the referendum.

The Survey proposals had already shot the fields of Oregon higher education full of shell holes when the referendum gun was fired. That was the signal for more confusion in the ranks. But it did not smoke screen the last subterranean attack of the University on the College School of Commerce, an attack that was aimed to reverse a previous ruling of the Board of Higher Education definitely continuing commerce at Corvallis. For the Board had already recognized the fact that the College had made good its case for the necessity of business training as allied to technical and scientific curricula, while the University had failed to show as close and essential an alliance between business training and the social sciences. In spite of this decision of the Board to allocate commerce to the College, and the parallel decision to continue major work in science at Eugene, the University injected into the forum a scheme for a "vertical division" of commerce between the two institutions and endeavored to put it through without the College having opportunity to consider or analyze it. The realization, apparently, of what such tactics as this might ultimately lead to, prompted decisive action on the part of the Board. Having settled the financial readjustments, with many curricular matters still unsatisfactory to both institutions, the Board of Higher Education issued an incisive and deliberate order. "As you were!" is the essence of that order. Both the College and the University continue their respective curricula for 1931-32 as in 1930-31, and issue their catalogs accordingly.

This action was taken on June 23. It came at the end of an exchange of seven or eight different briefs, argumentary and budgetary, following the receipt of the Survey report on April 3. It means that the integrity of the two institutions, as they have been developed thus far under the guidance of the State Board of Higher Curricula and the State Board of Higher Education, will be preserved until the Board can arrive at clear and deliberate understandings regarding such reallocations as seem economical and sound.

Throughout this disturbing period that followed the announcement of the Survey recommendations—so at war in many respects with the wise guiding principles on which they are supposed to rest—nothing is more reassuring for higher education in Oregon than the fairness and constructive wisdom of Dr. W. J. Kerr. His briefs took no advantage whatever of the numerous recommendations of the Survey assigning work to the College that has been performed by the University or the normal schools. The College briefs confined their argument to a defense of the fundamental major curricula that are everywhere accepted as inherent in the land-grant college, and to such supplementary training as is essential for American citizenship.

There has been a mistaken notion that the Survey proposed to take away from the College more than from the University. This is distinctly not the case. Except for the proposal to move commerce to the University, on the plea that it belongs with the social sciences rather than the natural sciences, the recommendations assigned greatly enlarged functions to the College—in science and the professional schools resting on science, in education, in joint curricula for architectural engineering, physical education, health, industrial journalism, etc. By any consistent scheme of logic or analogy, moreover, the Survey Commission, having assigned major work in natural science to the College, should also have assigned to it physical education, public health, nursing and medicine. This is the

Students Helped By O.S.P.A. Fund

OREGON druggists, under the leadership of John F. Allen, '95, established in 1925 an educational fund for students of the school of pharmacy of Oregon State, the first of its kind in the United States. That fund has since been the direct means by which a large number of young men and women taking courses in pharmacy have been able to complete their college training and enter the profession.

It was at the annual convention of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical association in July 1925 that Mr. Allen advanced the idea of the educational fund. He submitted the plans for the fund as the means by which the O.S.P.A. could show its appreciation for the dedication of the then new pharmacy building to that organization and for the state-wide benefits to be derived from the new building and equipment. Prior to the convention, Mr. Allen had talked over his plans for the fund with a group of druggists, all of whom became enthusiastic for the plan.

Members of the association accepted the plan and subscriptions to the fund were begun. The plan called for pledges of $100 to be paid over a period of 10 years, thus affording an increasing fund year by year as demands upon it would become greater. Mr. Allen made the initial pledge, which he increased to $1000 as an expression of gratitude for the response of other members to the plan.

Since inauguration of the fund a total of $11,375 has been pledged. During the six college years in which the moneys have been available a total of 63 loans have been made in amounts which have averaged $95. Loans, however, are not definitely limited in amount, but are based upon circumstances and needs of the applicants. The accumulated total of loans made to date is $5985, with a total interest earning from loans and savings deposits of $755.22.

Five members comprise the board of trustees which administers the fund. They are S. A. Matthieu, one of the early students in the school of pharmacy; John F. Allen, '95; Dean A. Ziefle; A. W. Allen, '85, executive secretary of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical association; and George Steelhammer, newly elected president of the association. Mr. Matthieu is president of the board, John F. Allen is treasurer and Dean Ziefle is executive secretary, all elective offices.

Never since the fund has been in operation has the organization incurred a loss through failure of a student to repay his loan. This remarkable record is unquestionably the result of able administration of the fund and the careful manner in which all loans are made.

Several noteworthy features differentiate this fund from similar educational and loan funds. Perhaps the most significant of these, from the point of view of sincerity of purpose, is the absence of operating expenses. All of the officers function without pay and such clerical assistance as is needed is provided through college channels. Thus every dollar is made available for the originally intended purpose of student assistance.

Dean Adolph Ziefle serves as executive secretary of the O.S.P.A. Educational Fund which was established in 1925 through the efforts of John F. Allen, '95. (A photograph of Mr. Allen appears elsewhere in this issue in connection with a story on the O.S.P.A. officers.)

Proper steps are taken at all times to prevent unworthy students from receiving benefit from the fund. Every applicant must demonstrate his sincerity of purpose and indicate fully his plans for use of the funds before he receives aid. That this phase in the administration of the fund has been successful is shown by the perfect record of loan repayments to date.

No better proof of the spirit in which the fund is received by students may be found than in the letters received from men who have since been graduated and have repaid their loans. A few excerpts from typical letters will indicate the feeling of appreciation for the financial assistance which, in many cases, spelled the attainment of a goal and the beginning of a career. These excerpts follow:

"I am making payment before due so that other worthy students may have no need to wait for their loans. I realize that this is more in the nature of a good will loan of a friend than a business transaction and I assure you that it has proven a very welcome aid

SUMMER SESSION SETS NEW MARK

★ By Allison Comish, '34 ★

FROM Hawaii, Canada, Holland, China, the Philippines and twenty states of the union came 865 students and teachers to attend the Summer Session held on the Oregon State campus, June 22 to July 31, under the direction of Dr. M. Ellwood Smith, dean of the school of basic arts and sciences. This enrollment is the largest ever attained at a summer session; 717 attended in 1930.

Some of the institutions represented were Stanford, the University of Washington, University of Idaho, University of Ohio and Whitman. Sixty per cent of the enrolled were teachers; undergraduates formed thirty-two per cent; and eight per cent were classed as miscellaneous. Seventy-three per cent of the undergraduates were Oregon State students. But for two weeks before this regular session, boys and girls from 4-H clubs throughout Oregon thronged the campus. H. C. Seymour, state club leader, made it possible for 725 members to attend classes and assemblies, to play tennis, to swim and to do the things they have looked forward all year to doing.

June 12 marked the beginning of a one-week conference for Smith-Hughes teachers of home economics. O. D. Adams, director of the State Board for Vocational Education, lectured on trades and industries. Fran-to me in the completion of my course in pharmacy at Oregon State College. I wish to take this opportunity to thank all of those who made this loan possible."

"Let me express my sincere appreciation for this cooperation which has been extended to me. This loan not only aided me in scholastic endeavor but also taught me to appreciate the value of money. Money may have its evils but if used judiciously it brings happiness and success. This I have accomplished to a great degree, and for all this I am very thankful to the O.S.P.A. educational fund."

"I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the trustees and the donors of this fund for it certainly helped me at a time when it was doubtful whether or not I'd finish my college course because of lack of finances."

Interest in the educational fund constantly is increasing among the members of the O.S.P.A. Many prominent druggists over the state have indicated their intentions to make bequests to the fund and assist in the ideal back of the fund, that of preventing any worthy man or woman from being lost to the pharmaceutical profession because of inadequate finances to complete their college training.

ces Maurine Wright, state supervisor of home economics education, gave special problems in home economics. A three-week course in agricultural education was also held. There was a large resident staff, and many visiting instructors. Among these were J. K. Wallace, marketing specialist of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics United States Department of Agriculture; James H. Pearson, of the Federal Board of Vocational Education; and Earl R. Cooley, state supervisor of agricultural education for Oregon.

Dean Smith brought outstanding visiting instructors to the campus, particularly in home economics. Among them were Mrs. Mary deGarmo Bryan, in charge of institution economics at Columbia university; Benjamin R. Andrews, household economist at Columbia university; Jane Hinkley, federal agent for vocational home economics; James Russell Patterson, special critic in interior decoration at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn; Mary A. Rokahr, extension economist in home management, U. S. Department of Agriculture; Doris Schumaker, assistant professor, home economics, Cornell university; Henry C. Sherman, particularly outstanding in food chemistry, at Columbia university; and Ella Ehnsen Wilson, dean of girls, Franklin high school, Portland.

Coach P. J. Schissler directed a two-week intensive course for athletic coaches. This has become an annual event, and four times during the past six years the late Knute Rockne headed the school.

Campus happenings of each week were published by the class in industrial journalism in the Summer Session News, under the editorship of Mary Bennett, '31 in vocational education. Elizabeth Barnes, associate professor of public speaking and dramatics, directed her classes in the production of two plays.

Among the outstanding men and women brought to the campus were Derrick Norman Lehmer, prominent as a composer, mathematician, professor and editor, who gave a recital of Indian and Alaskan songs; Ellen Van Volkenburg, internationally famous actress, producer, and director, who read two plays; Dr. William T. Foster, director of Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, who discussed the present business depression; Rabbi Felix Levy, of the Congregation Emanuel, Chicago, who gave two lectures; and Rollo A. Tallcott, dean of the Williams school of expression and dramatic art, Ithaca, New York, who read two plays.

President Kerr Wins Respect For Stand

recognized affiliation in other institutions. But President Kerr laid claim to none of these curricula. Only in refutation of the extravagant greed of the University, which in every brief, from the first to the last, sought to annex to itself vital work of the College, did the College briefs present any argument for taking over work in these fields beyond what was already regularly established on the campus. In a word there was no effort whatever to add to the College at the expense of any other institution.

In contrast to this the University, through its formal briefs and various types of propaganda, with unctuous protestations of good will on its tongue, made both open and covert attacks upon the resources and the good name of the College. Even the normal schools came in for attacks. The University, for instance, proposed to take away from the College, among other things, landscape gardening and industrial arts; and gravely showed how the normal schools could take care of $160,890 of the referendum losses as compared with $184,549 for the University, which had cash balances to take up $161,606 of this amount! The University in this connection proposed that the College meet $751,755 of the loss.

In the face of provocations such as this, and worse, the attitude of President Kerr, as already indicated, has been uniformly constructive. He has kept his faith in the institutions, in the Board of Higher Education, and in Oregon. He was disappointed in the Survey report because it not only failed to settle the differences that already existed between the University and the College, but, if its major recommendations were accepted, would have multiplied occasions for misunderstanding and conflict. Yet he made no attack on the report. On the contrary he endorsed the good in the Survey report and defended the College against its disrupting proposals. He squarely met the request of the Board for reduced budgets on the basis of the half million cut due to the Governor's veto, and again on the more drastic basis of the referendum of all the legislative appropriations. He did not attempt to shift the responsibility onto other institutions or back to the Board. It hurt to make the cuts, but he made them. His faculty, with splendid unanimity, offered to take their share of the loss by a reduction in salaries, already lower in general than at the University, and lower than in other institutions throughout the country. Step by step, as each problem came up, he met it, in so far as it applied to the College, in a spirit of cooperation with the other institutions and of helpfulness to the Board. There was no over-reaching, no appeal to prejudice, no stirring up of students or faculty or friends of the institution in an effort to get results. The President has a definite respect for facts. He assumed that the Board of Higher Education would want to know the facts about this institution, clearly and definitely stated. He presented them, accordingly, in the interest of a fuller and better understanding of Oregon State as a representative land-grant college.

President Kerr has the conviction that in developing this institution, the state has established here the essential elements of a land-grant college vital to the service of the agriculture and the industries of Oregon. Accordingly he defended the integrity of its curricula. In doing so, however, he followed his unvarying principle in not attacking or seeking in any way to undermine the work of any other institution. No better indication of his attitude throughout the controversy could be found than the fact that the Board of Higher Education itself adopted the fundamental principle that one state institution should not be built up by tearing down another.

We don't know what the effect has been upon the Board of Higher Education or upon the public. But the effect upon the faculty, alumni and student body is that of deeper confidence and larger faith in the President. Not that we've ever had any misgivings about him. We haven't. But we've never been surer than now that in President Kerr we have a leader that we can trust in any emergency. Great occasions strengthen and heighten him. We are proud of him, for we have implicit faith in his administrative principles.

O. S. P. A. Women's Auxiliary Announces New Award

THE Ladies Auxiliary of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical association, at the annual meeting of the association in July, unanimously voted an annual cash award of $25 to the woman student in pharmacy at Oregon State who is rated highest in womanhood and scholarship. The auxiliary has expressed the hope that the award will serve as a stimulus to greater effort and more serious approach to ideals of the profession.

A restful, wicker furnished room in the pharmacy building where women students of the school may study or just rest is another expression of the interest of the Women's auxiliary. This active organization is headed by Mrs. S. A. Matthieu, president; Mrs. A. W. Allen, secretary; and Mrs. Jack Laue, treasurer, all of whom were actively interested in establishing the new award for pharmacy women.

REX ROBINSON NAMED EDITOR

A NNOUNCEMENT by the board of directors of the appointment of Rex E. Robinson, '31 in vocational education, as editor of the Oregon State Monthly has been made by E. C. Allworth, secretary of the alumni association. Robinson will succeed A. L. McMillan, editor for the past year, who has resigned to accept a position as instructor of commercial subjects at Chico High School, California. The change will be effective with the September issue.

Rex A. Robinson, '31 VE, has been selected as editor of the Oregon State Monthly and will take over the duties with the September issue.

Robinson has made an enviable record on the campus as a student, debater and journalist. He was the first feature editor on the Barometer, a position created to fit his ability as a writer of feature material. He was twice in succession awarded the Theta Sigma Phi loving cup, an award for outstanding proficiency in feature writing.

For the past two years he has been a member of the Barometer staff, being an assistant night editor the past year. During his junior year he was on the staff of the Beaver annual. He will not take up his duties on the magazine unschooled, as he has been a student staff member for a year and has handled numerous feature length assignments during the year.

Robinson was a member of the varsity debate team during his junior and senior years. He was instrumental this year in the winning of meets which resulted in the college being named to the Pacific Coast championship.

Honor organizations to which Robinson has been elected include Phi Kappa Phi, all school honorary;

Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalistic fraternity; Delta Sigma Rho, national forensic fraternity; and Kappa Delta Pi, national educational honorary. During the past year he has been president of Delta Sigma Rho, and has taken an active part in helping Sigma Delta Chi retain its high national standing.

Robinson will take graduate work in public speaking and speech in addition to his editorial duties, following the precedent established by the two previous editors. Mr. McMillan has taken work in the school of vocational education during the past school year and Loring G. Hudson, editor from 1928 to 1930, studied in the botany department.

Portland Organizes Orange Council Body

I NITIATING a movement for definite organization of the Orange Council, a large number of Portland members, met at the University club and formed the first local chapter of the council.

A directorate consisting of Charles T. Parker, president; Dr. Richard P. Landis, vice-president; Charles J. Weber, secretary, D. W. Holgate, A. G. Sieberts, R. Earl Riley and John Laue was elected and authorized to adopt by-laws and a ritual. The board of directors was instructed to correspond with Orange Council members in other localities for the purpose of arranging an Orange Council convention on the campus during Homecoming week-end.

There are now 125 Portland members of the council and 91 attended the meeting. The scheduled feature which proved to be highly entertaining was an informal talk by Coach Paul J. Schissler. He reviewed the results of athletics during the last school year, and stated that this fall and in 1932 Oregon State should have the best football teams since he came to the college.

An unscheduled feature was the appearance for a brief time of President W. J. Kerr who received a heavy ovation and expressed his appreciation for alumni loyalty.

Ade Sieberts, chairman of the luncheon committee, announced that arrangements had been made for an Orange Council luncheon meeting at the Hazelwood on the fourth Monday of each month. Secretary Weber announced that every member will be given a copy of a directory showing the name, business, address and telephone number of each Orange Council member in Portland.

Preceding the meeting a dinner, attended by 25 members, was held at the University club.

The American Association of Agricultural College Editors will hold its annual meeting on the Oregon State campus August 11 to 15. This is the first convention of the association west of the Rocky Mountains. In attendance will be 10 representatives from the United States department of agriculture, and delegates from about 30 of the 48 land grant colleges in the United States.

Delegates from the east and middle west will arrive in a special car from which they will be transferred to automobiles about 45 miles out of Portland on the Columbia River highway, so they may see some of the scenic beauties of the state. The delegation will be entertained at a luncheon in Portland and will arrive in Corvallis Monday evening, August 10.

National authorities in the agricultural editorial field and newspaper and magazine editors will appear on the program. The Thursday program is scheduled for Agate Beach Inn, Newport, and the program Friday will be devoted to the use of the radio in disseminating agricultural information. High lights of the Corvallis social entertainment will be a banquet Wednesday evening at which the visiting delegates will be the guests of the college; a picnic luncheon Tuesday at the country home of E. T. Reed, college editor, and a social afternoon for visiting women.

In connection with the convention, the usual annual competitive exhibit of news service material, bulletins and posters will be on display in the main concourse of the Memorial Union building. Prizes will be awarded to the outstanding exhibit in each of the 14 classes to which the majority of the colleges will contribute.

C. D. Byrne, professor of industrial journalism and national secretary of the association, is arranging the program and heading up local arrangements for the meeting. The local committee on preparations consists of E.

T. Reed, college editor; W. A. Jensen, executive secretary; John C. Burtner and Fred M. Shideler, of the industrial journalism department; U. S. Burt, extension service staff; W. L. Kadderly, director of KOAC; Winston Wade, assistant announcer for KOAC; D. M. Goode, assistant college editor, and A. L. McMillan, alumni editor.

Oregon people who are scheduled to appear on the program include B. F. Irvine, editor of the Oregon Journal; Jeannette Cramer, home economics editor for the Oregonian; Fred Clemens, managing editor of the Northwest Farm Trio, and Charles A. Sprague, editor of the Salem Statesman. Local speakers will include James T. Jardine, director of agricultural experiment station; Paul V. Maris, director of extension service, W. L. Kadderly and U. S. Burt.

The general student body average for the past spring term was 1.40. This is .02 higher than the average for the third term last year. College women raised their average the third term from 1.43 of a year ago to 1.50, while the men of the campus maintained the same average standing held last year of 1.35.

The comparative standing of sororities for the third term is as follows:

At the request of the Chinese government Ava B. Milam, dean of the school of home economics, sailed for China July 17, on the S. S. President Madison from San Francisco, to further the home economics work of that country which she began on her previous visit in 1924. She will aid with curriculum construction and course content revision during her year's absence.

Since Dean Milam's visit to China seven years ago, the Ministry of China has made it compulsory that all high schools for women be required to give instruction in home economics. Recently the International Institute of the Teachers College, Columbia, has published a book written by Miss Milam, entitled "Student Homes of China," which she prepared from material collected in 1923. In her absence Miss A. Grace Johnson, professor of household administration, will act as dean of the school of home economics.

"Teaching Gregg Shorthand by the Analytical Method" by Minnie Demotte Frick, assistant professor of secretarial training, has just been released by the Gregg Publishing Company. The object of the book is to furnish a method of presenting the daily lesson to be used hand in hand with the Gregg Manual, and as a text in training classes for teachers. Mrs. Frick is the originator of the analytical method of presenting shorthand and her new book completes the method which was begun in her text, "Analytical Lessons in Gregg Shorthand," published in 1924.

Mrs. Frick is returning to the campus this fall for her 13th year, after having a year's Sabbatical leave during which, in addition to the writing of her book, she instructed classes in methods in shorthand through the extension department of the University of Utah, and in the teachers' training department of the University of California, 1930 summer session.

A national trend toward specialized rather than general journalistic training for women was revealed in discussions at the national convention of Theta Sigma Phi, national journalism fraternity for women, reports Mary Bennett, Oregon State college chapter delegate who has returned from the meeting at Columbia, Missouri. It was reported that the greatest demand is for women trained in specialized fields such as are needed on trade magazines, including basic training in health problems, home economics, languages and similar specialties, rather than for the generally trained writers.

A self-rating scale for county school superintendents has just been completed by R. J. Clinton, associate professor of education at Oregon State College, and E. H. Castle, superintendent of schools in Benton county. The first part of the scale measures physical, educational and social qualities and the last half measures ability to perform such duties as clerical, administrative, supervisory, teacher improvement and judiciary problems. The scale will be published by the Public School Publishing Company of Bloomington, Ill. It will be ready for use early in September.

Mrs. Lillian Jeffreys Petri, professor of piano and music theory, presented Byron Arnold in recital, July 16. Mr. Arnold, who for the past seven years has been a student of Mrs. Petri, is professor of organ and musical history at the college. The program represented compositions by Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, and a final group of the ultra-modern compositions.

During the school year 1930-31 which ended with the close of the summer session, 5,117 students have earned credit. Some schools and departments have lost in enrollment, while others have gained considerably. The schools of agriculture, engineering, forestry and mines have increased in number, and the graduate students of the past year numbered 137 as compared with 116 of the previous year. Should the number of registrants in the short courses be added this would make a grand total of 5,587. The short courses in which work was offered were butter making, household equipment, and the canners school. The faculty night classes which were a new institution last year have proved popular, and the correspondence enrollment has increased more than 400 percent.

The engineering department was represented at the conference of the Pacific Northwest Brick and Tile Association held in Seattle by Professors W. J. Gilmore and J. R. Griffith. Professor Gilmore, of the department of agricultural engineering, was the principal speaker; Professor Griffith also appeared on the conference program. Philip Corbett of the Corvallis Brick and Tile Works made the trip with Professor Gilmore.

The Oregon State college department of agriculture is cooperating with the Brick and Tile Association in the interest of farm development work and building plans more suitable for Oregon farmers, and will make an effort to have the next conference on the local campus.

An article "Teaching College Students How to Read" by F. W. Parr, associate professor of education, has just been published in the "Journal of Higher Education." The article deals with an experiment in remedial instruction at the university level which Dr. Parr conducted at the University of Iowa. It brings out facts concerning the relation between poor reading habits and failure to master college courses.

Dr. H. R. Laslett, professor of education and psychology at Oregon State College, will be included in the new "Who's Who in Education" which is being compiled by Dr. J. McK. Cattell. Dr. Cattell's book will include the names of the most prominent educators of America.

Don Carlos Mote, professor of entomology, attended the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held June 17, 18, and 19 at Pasadena.

G. L. Sulerud, assistant agricultural economist has recently published a bulletin on the economic study of the hop industry in Oregon. The bulletin, issued by the division of agricultural economics in the experiment station, contains information regarding the trends of hop production and prices in Oregon as compared to other states and foreign countries. It includes an estimate of Oregon's competitive position and contains much research material.

On his vacation trip east, M. Ellwood Smith, dean of the school of basic arts and sciences, has been invited to inspect the plans of the Memorial Grove committee in Berkeley and The Heights. The Heights is the site of Joaquin Miller's old home which has been converted into a Memorial park, in which trees are planted in memory of the great western writers and where memorial services are held annually. Dean Smith is president of the League of Western Writers.

From Berkeley the Smith family will visit Los Angeles, the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and various educational institutions in the east. They will also renew acquaintances with old friends at Cornell and Syracuse, and visit Dr. Smith's old home in New York City.

Miss Elizabeth Barnes, associate professor of public speaking, has been granted a sabbatical leave for the ensuing year. Although her plans are indefinite she expects to spend the greater part of the year in Vienna studying at the Reinhardt School of the Theatre. While on her leave Miss Barnes expects to visit in London with Maurice Brown and Ellen von Volkenburg. Miss von Volkenburg (Mrs. Maurice Brown) internationally famous actress, producer, reader and director, read two current plays, "The Green Pastures" and "The Venetian" during the past summer session.

Professor J. Leo Fairbanks, head of the art department at Oregon State College has been appointed by Governor Meier on a committee to select portraits of ex-governor Norblad and ex-governor Patterson which will be hung in the Capitol building at Salem.

An article "The Contract Plan in Retrospect" by Allison Comish, freshman in vocational education, has been published recently in the "School and Society" magazine.

B. G. Thompson, assistant entomologist, is president of the Pacific Northwest Archery Association, which held its annual tournament in Corvallis July 11 and 12. Participants were registered from fourteen Oregon cities, and four Washington cities, Longview, Seattle, Spokane and Wenatchee, were represented.

PHARMACY BODY ACTIVE IN STATE

H EADING up the activities of druggists of Oregon is the Oregon State Board of Pharmacy, one of the appointive boards that make up the administrative structure of the state. The pharmacy board consists of five men, selected because they are successful pharmacists, progressive and capable leaders and representatives of the highest ethics of the profession.

Not only does the state board perform its function of examining and certificating applicants and other requisite duties, but it has undertaken a worthy program looking to the advancement of standards within the profession.

Outstanding in its efforts has been the establishment of an analytical laboratory in the Pharmacy building of the college, one of the most up-to-date and thoroughly equipped laboratories of its type in the country. Here druggists and doctors of the state are at liberty to submit any specimens or samples for analysis without cost. The laboratory has been maintained by the board purely for the benefit of the profession and is strictly non-commercial. Discoveries in the laboratory, experimental problems and the laboratory itself furnish a valuable supplement to the training of pharmacy students at the college. L. C. Britt, '26, is director.

At the present time, four of the five members of the state board are Oregon State Alumni. We take this occasion to introduce the members of the board.

John F. Allen, '95, needs no further introduction. He has for years been a leader in pharmaceutical affairs of the state and was the father of the educational fund for pharmacy students at the college. He has long been active in the O.S.P.A. The Allen drug store which he now operates dates back to 1855 when it was established by Mr. Allen's father.

For 38 years E. E. Magee has been actively engaged in pharmacy, having started in the business in San Jose, California, in 1893. In addition he has been admitted to the California and Oregon bar. He came to Oregon in 1912 and has since been connected with Underwood's pharmacy in Klamath Falls.

Magee was appointed to the state board by Governor Patterson in 1927, reappointed in 1928 and is now the senior member of the board. He has been active in the Woodmen of America, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and has held high local and state offices in the Masonic lodge. He has contributed extensively to pharmaceutical journals.

Starting in the drug business at the age of 13, Frank O. Berg, one of the most recent appointees to the board, has followed the profession for 25 years. Except for the time spent at North Pacific College of Pharmacy at Portland, and at Oregon State college

O.S.P.A. CHOOSES YEAR'S OFFICERS

AT the annual meeting of the Oregon State Pharmaceutical association, better known as the O.S. P.A., officers for the year 1931-32 were elected. George Steelhammer, outstanding druggist of Silverton, was chosen president. He has long been active in pharmaceutical work in the state and is an active supporter of the Oregon State College school of pharmacy, having employed numerous graduates from time to time. Last year he was vice-president of the association.

Harry Weiss, owner of the Opera House pharmacy in Portland and an active member of the Portland Retail Druggists association, was elected vice-president. He was for several years proprietor of the Capitol pharmacy at Salem before moving to Portland. A. S. Keir, elected second vice-president, is a druggist and prominent citizen of Hood River, where he owns the Keir Drug company. He is the father of Paul E. Keir, '31 in pharmacy.

After a respite of a few years from the duties of secretary, A. W. Allen, '85, was again elected to that position for another year. For more than a quarter century prior to 1925 he was secretary of the association. In 1925-26 he was named president. From 1926 until this year he held no office. Allen has been active in raising educational requirements and providing better facilities for pharmacy students. He has also been an active worker for legislation beneficial to pharmacy interests.

Jack Laue, member of the drug firm, Laue-Davis, in Portland, is the new treasurer of the association. He is the son of one of the most prominent druggists of the Pacific northwest and is an active member of the Portland and state associations. In addition to his pharmacy business, Laue is Oregon agent for the American Druggist Fire Insurance Company.

school of pharmacy, Berg has resided since birth in Astoria where he now is a part owner of the Hellberg Drug company.

Morrice C. Kaegi, '20, owner of the Kaegi pharmacy on Sandy boulevard in Portland, was appointed to the state board by Governor Norblad to fill the unexpired term of A. E. Crosby, resigned. Kaegi has been active in the Portland Retail Druggists association. He was one of the organizers and is now a director of the Druggists Cooperative association. He is also a director of the Rose City Park Lions club.

Marion E. McKee, '25, most recent of the appointees to the board, is proprietor of the Moro pharmacy at Moro. He just recently purchased the store there, having previously been engaged in the profession in Portland. He is an active member of the local Commercial club and the Knights of Pythias and is clerk of the school district.

THE HOMEMAKER'S DEPARTMENT

★ Ruth Kennedy Tartar, '20, Editor ★

Mothers who studied foods and nutrition in their undergraduate days were duly impressed with the opinion of food experts in regard to milk as an essential food for growing children. In the last few years, much has been said and printed for and against the teaching of feeding the child a quart of milk daily. Some advocates have achieved acclaim by announcing that the value of milk is overestimated and that such teaching is entirely unfounded. (The favor was generally accorded by the mother who had difficulty in seeing to it that her child had his daily portion.) But, regardless, the people who have given most study to scientific feeding, go right on telling us that milk—a quart a day for every child, cooked in foods or given as beverage—is desirable.

Miss Mabel Wood, assistant professor of foods and nutrition at the college, recently reported a feeding experiment carried on in her classes, which will give us an idea of the work upon which such specialists base their opinions. Miss Wood says:

"Last term my nutrition girls studied the effect of various foods on the growth and appearance of the white rat. We took six animals of equal size and age and gave them all the buttered whole wheat bread toast they could eat. To one cage of animals, we supplied all the coffee they wanted in addition to their toast. To a second pair, we gave all the milk that they wanted in addition to their toast; and to the third pair we gave a carefully measured amount of milk—just a teaspoonful each day.

"At the end of ten weeks this is what had happened. The rats on toast and plenty of milk had gained four times their original weight. They were sleek, active, curious, normal animals, of good size and development, with all the evidence of good health. The rats on the limited amount of milk, the teaspoonful, were a little less than three times their original weight. Their fur was a little less shiny, but as far as outward appearances showed, they were in fair condition.

"The coffee and toast animals were a sorry sight. In the first place they had not gained at all. One of them was even a little less in weight than when they were started. They could be found all hunched up and looking quite as miserable as a desperately ill person. Their fur had yellowed and was brittle and shaggy. They were cross at times, and at other times would be so listless that we could scarcely arouse them. It didn't take a specialist to see that something was wrong with this pair.

"The first thing my girls questioned was whether the rats actually drank the coffee and if it was the coffee that caused the effect. Well, of course, we know that it usually isn't the coffee, the sugar or the over supply of meat that causes the deleterious effect on ones health, but, rather, it is because they crowd out the milk and fruits and vegetables that are so essential to growth and development.

"Milk is the only food that we are able to take in large enough quantities to supply calcium for our bones and teeth. Our rats lacked both calcium for bones and complete proteins for muscle growth. That this was true, we proved by giving these sick rats some milk. They responded by growing to almost normal animals, although these particular rats had suffered a deficiency for so long that their growth was permanently scarred. Had we given them milk sooner, no doubt they would have made a better recovery.

"We are fortunate in knowing how much milk in human feeding corresponds to the amounts fed in these animal experiments. Dr. Sherman, our food and nutrition expert in New York (he has just completed his second special summer session courses at O.S.C.) tells us that his experiments show that a quart of milk daily is a good allowance for anyone, but that it is essential for the child if we expect him to have excellent bone and tooth development. A pint of milk will serve the growing child as the teaspoonful served the growing rat. It will provide some growth and maintain a certain degree of health, but the optimum of each is more nearly reached according to our standards now, on a quart of milk per person."

Did you ever consider the possibilities of your own back yard as a play place for you with your own children as playmates? asks Miss Ruth Thayer of the department of physical education for women.

The back yard was the original play ground, the home was the original recreation center. A few years ago there was no large choice of recreation outside the home, and the family was more nearly a unit. With the developments of modern times, the tendency has been to go away from home for recreation. This results in breaking up of family unity. Parents mourn over their inability to understand or influence their children. Parental respect on the part of children seems to have weakened.

Through wholehearted taking part in home play activities, parents and children come to know each other and to lay the foundation for a happy relationship which is the greatest protection against future difficulty.

The family that plays together stays together. Through play life with children and through a larger use of the home as a recreation center for the entire family, a more complete understanding will result and home life will be enriched. Try it this summer and see if you don't gain in health, in spirits and comradeship.

Because summer is now here we are going to tell you particularly about outdoor activities in which Mother and Dad can take part with the children. Equipment can be as much or as little as you please. Have you a beach ball, one of those large, many colored balls? If not, get one. They are inexpensive and may be used for many kinds of games. Throw and catch it with your 6-year old. Small daughter can in this way acquire skill in handling a ball which will give her much satisfaction later. With the 10-year old you can get up a game of volleyball over the clothesline, batting the ball into the air and trying to keep it from touching the ground on your side. Or try a game of handball, batting it against the garage or cellar wall.

After supper get Dad and the boys to join you in a good old game of dodge ball. The same clothesline can double in a game of Badminton, which sounds complicated, but is only batting a feathered cork back and forth over the line with a couple of tennis rackets. The cork being light does not get out of bounds as a ball would.

Those same rackets can be used with a tennis ball on the garage door to good advantage in improving your own tennis game or in teaching small daughter the fundamental strokes. You may have a future champion in your family, if she gets an early start along the right lines. Paint a horizontal line across the garage doors three feet from the ground, then another line parallel to it and one foot above it. Divide the enclosed space into three parts. Count the two outer spaces three and the center space one. Stand 39 feet away, bounce your ball and strike it with your racket trying to hit 3. See how many times you can hit it out of ten tries. Who can make the best score for the evening? Can Mother and son beat Dad and daughter? Neighbors will come to watch and then they will want to try, too. Perhaps you have the beginnings of a neighborhood tennis court right there.

With the Countryman Editor

Joe W. Jarvis, '32, Editor

"How did the Smith-Hughes summer school from June 22 to July 10 come out?" asked the Countryman reporter of H. H. Gibson, head of the agricultural education department.

"Very good," answered Gibson. "We had O. D. Adams, director of the state board for vocational education, to teach courses in trades and industries.

"All the seniors who graduated this year in Smith-Hughes were here for the three-weeks school. Besides them, there were nearly all the other Smith-Hughes teachers in Oregon, and several from Washington and Idaho who graduated from Oregon State college. About 30, altogether, were present.

"Was Russell Adams, Smith-Hughes instructor in Forest Grove high school, here," asked the reporter.

"No," said Gibson. "Adams is attending a two-months summer school at Stanford University. He won't be back until August 15. During his absence Joe W. Jarvis, junior in agriculture, is carrying on his work at Forest Grove."

Gibson volunteered no more information, so the reporter went to see W. S. Brown, head of the department of horticulture.

"How did your strawberry experiment come out this year?" he inquired.

"Well," said Brown, "we grew some 65,000 plants in an attempt to develop a better variety, especially for preserving. We used to have an advantage over the east when it came to preserving strawberries, because our Marshal variety made better preserves than anything that was adapted back there.

"Now, however, they have developed a variety just as good as the Marshal, or a little better. So it's up to us to get a berry that will enable us again to put up better preserves than they can.

"For the past few years this department has done breeding work with strawberries. Pollen from flowers of one variety was transferred to the flowers of a different variety.

"From each cross, there were as many different kinds of plants as there were seeds in the resulting berry. Records were kept of all plantings, so that we knew from just what cross each plant came.

"Each year the plants were watched carefully for desirable characteristics. When we found one that looked good, we marked it for special attention."

"Have you developed any good new varieties yet," asked the reporter.

"Yes," replied Brown, "we have a few that we are multiplying now for distribution. One of them is peculiar in that it won't form runners unless the flowers are picked off.

"Another experiment we are carrying on is irrigation of small fruits. We have found that irrigation pays, even when a well has to be dug and the water pumped. I have recently prepared a bulletin which summarizes our results.

"Our rose oil experiments are interesting. We are trying out 65 kinds of roses in an attempt to find one that contains a high percentage of oil. If we can, there is a possibility of developing a perfume industry here."

Interested now in experiment station work, the reporter went to see Don Hill, associate agronomist.

"Yes," said Don, "we are experimenting with rotations, fertilizers, varieties and irrigation. We find that the beneficial effects of landplaster or sulfur on legumes are marked.

"Perhaps the most interesting experimental work is being done by Dr. Earl N. Bressman, who has been placed by the federal government in charge of hop breeding to obtain varieties resistant to the downy mildew which threatens to prove disastrous to hop growers in the Willamette valley, where most of the hops of the United States are produced.

"Bressman has obtained from England 60 hop plants which are resistant to the mildew. He intends to cross with these plants of our higher yielding American strains, hoping in that way to develop a desirable, high-yielding variety resistant to mildew.

"Several years will probably be necessary for him to get results, as is always the case in plant breeding experiments. He has made a portion of the east farm into a miniature hop yard and will do most of his work out there.

"One of the difficulties of breeding hops is that they take two years to form seed. Bressman, however, has got them to flower and bear seed in five months by growing them in the greenhouse.

"While Bressman works to develop resistant varieties, the government is not neglecting immediate control measures. G. R. Hoerner, plant pathologist, has been sent to Corvallis to study the disease and develop controls for it. He and Bressman cooperate in much of their work."

A visit to the horticultural products building resulted in some more information about experimental work.

E. H. Wiegand, professor of horticultural products, has experimented on the preparation of frozen strawberries in an attempt to find better methods of preparation and freezing and to determine the best varieties.

The Marshal variety appears to be the coming freezing berry, according to Wiegand. It maintains its flavor best. Clark's Seedling has given fair results, and other berries are sometimes used.

The Pacific Northwest leads in the production of frozen berries at the present time.

"Those same garage doors may be used for handball, too, with the tennis ball or with a small rubber ball. With a soft, play-ground ball a game of baseball will do for all the family.

If you can't find four old horse shoes around the place, beg some so that you can play "barnyard golf." Place your stakes 30 feet apart, extending 10 inches above the ground. Get the family and neighbors to enter singles and doubles tournaments. If you have golf clubs but no nearby course, make a putting green out of a smooth bit of lawn. Sink your cup, then make a game of your practice by setting up two or more croquet wickets to shoot through or around. Speaking of croquet, that is a good old game which is coming back into favor. It is particularly good for the little people or for a time when it is too hot for more active games.

Let Dad and the children make equipment for play when possible. Interest in the activity will grow out of their natural desire to make something. One family began by collecting rocks for an out-door fireplace, a project which developed first into campfire suppers for the family, and later into regular neighborhood gatherings for games and singing.

Disillusionment

Before I begin, let me explain how I happened to entitle whatever this turns out to be, what I did:

I heard some one utter the word "disillusionment," and it struck me that it was a very good word, in fact that it was good enough to be a whole sentence; consequently, I have written it down here as a title, and now I'm going to get a dictionary and find out what the thing means, and then I'll proceed to tell a story about it. Of course, if I can't find it in the dictionary, that will prove that there is no such word and that the person I heard say it is either a plain liar in a plain liar's clothes, or a lawyer, or a politician, or any other member of the species whose affliction it is to fly a string and make people think there's a kite on it; furthermore, if I can't find it in the dictionary, it may also prevent my writing the story—but it is not likely to; however, if it does, then this explanation will suffice to show why this story which follows never was written.

In the lifetime of every individual there must come sometime, soon or late, rarely or with frequency, some great disillusionment. One is usually disillusionized about love and faithfulness. That would make a nice story here, as it has made several thousand before; however, I remember distinctly that at the moment I was born, I was entirely without illusion about such a thing, and, having never acquired one since, I can see no sense at all in writing about losing an illusion along that line; therefore, that possibility is out; however, there surely must be something else in which an illusion could be lost—even though the 987,000 poets and sad forget-me-nots have never let on that there is—

There was once a young boy; in fact, he was a very young fry. Furthermore, if I may be called a judge, he had some tendencies towards being a normal boy.

This boy lived on a farm, which is another point in favor of his normality. The farmhouse was situated a few hundred feet off the state highway.

At this point I see I shall have to have another character, so, if you will permit it, I will bring a cow into the story. I shall waste no words telling of the character of the cow, as, in the first place, I never have known a cow who had character, and, in the second place, I don't think the cow is going to be the main character—that is, I don't think it is the cow which is going to be disillusionized in the end. (Although don't think I couldn't tell it that way: I can't see any reason why a cow couldn't be disillusionized about some affair just as well and as woefully as so many thousands of poets have been.)

Now the cow always was turned out onto the highway during the day to wander and to graze on the grass and on the cigarette stubs that were thrown

PULL

Four men sat in a room;
Three were talking:
"I have a pull," said one,
"With Mayor of this town;
"I know him well; I may
"Gain much through knowing him."
The second rose above the first:
"My pull," his boast began,
"Is with the governor of state;
"His power may do much for me."
The third knew greater office still:
"I have a friend, the President," said
he:
"And his high office orders what I ask."
The fourth was silent;
They asked,
"Do you know no great man?"
He shook his head:
"None."

That night at home
The fourth one loosed his backward collar to retire;
He bowed his head

out of passing cars. Many times during the day she was very nearly run over by such trifles as motor trucks and stages; but she never was, because I have to save her to figure in the final disillusionment of the boy. Of course, if I find I can't find a way to get the boy properly disillusionized, I'll come back to this point and have the cow bumped off (and thereby disillusionized herself, by the way) and thus excuse myself for being unable to complete the story by laying it to a non-co-operative spirit on the part of one of the characters.

After school each day, the boy would clamber aboard a horse and go galloping down the highway to bring home the bacon—or, pardon, the steak (and it very nearly was steak once in a while when the cow attempted to waddle across the road in front of a thundering young boxcar).

He used to notice the gazes of people in passing cars, and observed them to be attitudes of admiration; he heard comments, and recognized them likewise to be distinct compliments.

Time passed, and the signs of atrocious conceit began to show in the boy. He had no doubt that the passers-by were deeply impressed by his horsemanship and certain other of his attributes which became now very evident to him. He developed a chronic perversion for borrowing his elder brother's huge, near-Stetson hat when he went on his pilgrimage for the cow.

He used to sit his horse with affected unconcern and with great disdain gaze completely through his "admirers." He used to say in inward ecstasy, "O boy, I bet they're thinking I'm Tom Mix!"

But now I think I'll bring in the disillusionment before I forget about it.

One day when everything, the egotism and the cow, was going along quite smoothly, the boy was amazed to see that a passer-by was looking not at him, but at his horse! Another car passed by, and as it passed, he heard a complimenting phrase begun, at which he tilted up his hat a bit; but at the end of that same phrase he heard distinctly the word "horse!" And then grave doubts began to cross his mind.

Time passed and so did other cars. Eventually, by the process of elimination, the boy deduced that two-thirds of the people who passed by were commenting with admiration on the attributes of his horse. Needless to say, a trifle of humility crept into his affectation of arrogance. However, he be-thought himself, one-third of the people were admiring him; and, after all, he shouldn't begrudge the horse some of the attention, because the horse certainly was a fine animal. Thus he eased his mind somewhat and patted the good horse's neck.

On the following evening he rode out again after the cow. But now, his attention concentrated on the whole matter, he began to be horribly aware that as he rode after the cow, he received but precisely two-thirds of the attention he did on returning with the cow.

And therein lies the tale, not of the cow, but of the disillusionment: for it burst full upon him that while two thirds of the passersby were speaking of the features of the horse, the other third were commenting on the cow!

And the next day the boy left his brother's Stetson hat on its nail, while the egotism he had left mostly on his pillow.

Directory of Pharmacy Graduates

★ Compiled by Miss Myrtle Burnap ★

Professional Application Of Pharmacy Ranks High

The school of pharmacy has been weighed and found not wanting. The true test of any undertaking is summed up in the one word, results. Results of the school's efforts to train men and women for pharmaceutical positions have been measured by the sound method of tabulating the present position of every graduate.

Approximately 80 percent of all those who have completed their work in pharmacy at O.S.C. are following lines directly or closely associated with their training. Compared with figures for all the schools and departments, a showing of eight out of ten so employed places pharmacy near the top for professional stability of its trainees. A survey conducted last year by a student of the college revealed a general average of about 70 percent, with pharmacy one of the leading schools.

Since 1895, the year in which the first pharmacy class was graduated, 594 students have completed their courses in that school, of which number 491 were men and 103 women. Slightly more than half the women have since been married, which accounts for 9.2 percent of the total of those not now following the profession.

The most recent analysis of the professional application of pharmacy training has been made by Miss Myrtle Burnap, secretary for the school of pharmacy, who compiled the directory which follows, and which contains a complete list of all pharmacy graduates. Her analysis shows that 40.2 percent are practicing pharmacists; 23.9 percent are proprietors; 5.4 percent are physicians; 3.8 percent are salesmen; 3.7 percent are instructors; and 2 percent are medical students. Of those remaining 9.2 percent are housewives, 8.9 percent are following miscellaneous lines and 2.9 percent are deceased.

Pharmacy Grads of O. S. C.

Greetings

Fellow Druggists:

Your school is proud of your accomplishments in the business world. Since the "big day" at Corvallis a lot of things have happened. You have been attending the school of practical experience and that, combined with the schooling at O.S.C., has fitted you well to occupy the position you do.

We, of the Blumauer-Frank Drug Company, are proud to number you among our friends and customers. We are in business to serve the truly Independent Druggists—your problems are ours, for as you prosper so do we.

We are not affiliated with any chain, retail or wholesale, local or national. Independently owned and operated by western people. As an Independent Drug Jobber we solicit your patronage and cooperation.

Very truly yours,
BLUMAUER-FRANK DRUG CO.,
Portland Oregon

EVERY TIME you telephone you share the benefits of a nation-wide communication system using eighty million miles of wire and employing four hundred thousand people. It represents a plant investment of more than four thousand million dollars, yet you can use a part of it for as little as five cents . . . for considerably less on a monthly service basis.

The organization that makes efficient telephone service possible is called the Bell System, yet it is as truly yours as if it were built specially for you. For every telephone message is a direct contact between you and the person you are calling.

At any hour of the day or night, the telephone stands ready and waiting to carry your voice to any one of twenty million other telephone users in this country. It knows no rest or sleep, or class or creed. All people—everywhere—may use it equally. Its very presence gives a feeling of security and confidence and of nearness to everything. Many times during the day or week or month, in the ordinary affairs of life and in emergencies, you see the value of the telephone and realize the indispensable part it plays in every business and social activity.

The growth of the Bell System through the past fifty-five years and the constant improvement in service may well be called one of the great achievements of this country. Greater even than that are the policies, improvements and economies that make this service possible at such low cost.

Of all the things you buy, probably none gives so much for so little as the telephone.
