Legal concerns stall hearing

By KEVIN WHITE and TODD POWELL of the Barometer

A decision on whether Bryan Gould was properly disqualified from ASOSU office was postponed Tuesday evening due to legal concerns over whether the press could attend closed deliberations after an open hearing held by the Judicial Board.

The Judicial Board hearing was called to review the handling of charges that Gould campaigned illegally during voting for the position of ASOSU vice president for senate. The board reviewed testimony brought before the ASOSU Elections Subcommittee May 4, and heard new testimony as well.

Bob Stepro, Judicial Board chair, stated after the hearing that he would not allow any representatives of the press into the meeting because the Judicial Board is analogous to the Supreme Court, a body that would not allow press members to attend its closed sessions.

"I could be wrong or I could be right," Stepro said of his decision. "I was just going on the Constitution and the statutes."

"I just wanted to do the right thing and make things run smoothly for ASOSU ... I'm not trying to cause any problems," he added. Representatives of the Daily Barometer argued that all public meetings are open to the press under Oregon's open meetings law.

Stepro, a self-proclaimed lawyer-to-be, disagreed. However, outgoing ASOSU President Bob Mumford happened to be near the Memorial Union and was called upon to intercede. After a short deliberation the Judicial Board discontinued the closed session in order to seek legal advice on the issue.

According to Stepro, the Judicial Board inquiry was held to decide whether the last hearing conducted adhered to ASOSU

'From what we've heard from each side tonight, there still seems to be a lot of gray area," he said.

The board heard, via tape recorder, from Gene Newburgh, who was a poll watcher in the quad the day the infractions occurred. According to Newburgh's testimony, Gould was seen walking on the two main pathways into the quad, meeting students, talking with them and walking with them to the quad.

Testimony was also submitted in the form of minutes taken at the May 4 Elections Subcommittee by Mike Vanderbeek, elections co-chair, who spoke for the defense at the hearing.

The testimony was given by Gary West, junior in liberal arts. West stated at the May 4 hearing that he heard "Mr. Gould say 'spread the word, vote for me,' " at a table next to the voting

Later, Judicial Board member Troy Kimball asked Gould if he "screamed across the quad."

"I never said vote for me," Gould said. "I said, 'spread the president for senate, had a conflict of interest between her political desires and her responsibilities to ensure a fair trial.

Gould also complained that Karen Garrison, ASOSU vice ed.

"I am not saying that she had a malicious intent to keep me out of office," Gould said.

Gould also said he felt Garrison should have stepped down from the proceedings because she had "actively campaigned for my opponent, Joel Corcoran.'

Furthermore, Gould said he was unsure why Garrison was allowed to sign the letter which contained the Elections Subcommittee's decision.

Garrison later stated she signed the letter because Don Sanderson, director of student activities, said the judgment would not be official without her signature.

"I have very good reasons for everything that I've done, and if anyone had bothered to ask, it could be defended," Garrison said after last night's hearing.

According to Garrison, she participated in the second hearing only because she wanted to ensure that hearing procedures conducted properly. She was not, however, even notified of last night's Judicial Board hearing, and therefore was not present to be questioned.

'It's a non-win situation," she said. "I get slammed if go, I get slammed if I don't.'

According to Stepro, the only responsibilities the Judicial Board had were to notify both the plaintiff and the defendant, both of whom were informed of the hearing.

'If they wish to call any witnesses...then they have to take it upon themselves to do that," he said, stating that the board had no obligation to contact Garrison.

At the hearing, Gould also questioned the fact that the 100 foot boundary was not clearly marked and that the pollwatchers did not know where that boundary was.

Both Gould and the Elections Subcommittee paced off the distance from the quad and down the diagonal path, arriving at estimates of 240 feet and 250 feet, respectively, well beyond the 100 feet demanded by elections regulations.

Vanderbeek admitted that the 100 foot area was never marked off, but maintained that the subcommittee had found Gould guilty because of his alleged campaigning next to the polling tables, well within the 100 foot zone.

In closing arguments, Gould maintained that he had not campaigned at the booth and "did not escort people to the voting booth and say 'vote for me.

Gould also asked the Judicial Board, "Do the students elect their representatives or do a select few decide?"

Until a decision has been reached by the board, Joel Corcoran, acting vice president for senate, has had a restraint order placed on him by the Judicial Board. This keeps Corcoran from making any decisions until a verdict in the case has been reach-of the Barometer

Next week a proposal for guidelines on hiring foreign graduate teaching assistants will be presented to Graham Spanier, vice president for academic affairs and provost. "TAs are being forced into teaching in the classroom when they are not prepared for teaching. This causes a problem not only for the English student to understand, but also for someone from Indonesia having to understand someone from China," said Shane Wall, ASOSU Academic Affairs Task Force director.

To form a policy that addresses the areas of concern, the task force contacted several foreign members of the Graduate and Professional Student Association (GTA), undergraduates, departments, faculty members and the administration, Wall said.

A professional survey was conducted to gather information from undergraduates, with the help of Lyle Calvin, dean of the graduate school. All campus departments were asked what type of policy they followed when hiring a foreign GTA. This is where a lack of a standardized policy was discovered, Wall said.

With the information the task force gathered, a proposal will be drawn to standardize the graduate TA protraining, recording and

Expensive imitation surfers

To the editor

It's spring again; the weather's warming up and it looks like the "surfer" style will be around for at least one more summer. You know the look — brightly colored knee-length shorts, "surfer" t-shirt, sunglasses and topsiders without socks. I got out my calculator and added up the cost: $35 shorts, $20 shirt, $60 sunglasses, and $40 topsiders. This adds up to a grand total of $155 - and I'm only half-dressed!

I don't know about you, but I can't afford to keep up with this fad. I say we stop trying to portray this expensive "surfer" image. Let's face it, I don't surf and neither do 99 percent of the students at this school. We all look like cloned fools walking around in a $155 "surfer" get-up. I suggest we leave "Maui and Sons," "Gotcha," "Quicksilver" and all those other trendy overpriced brand names to people who really surf and get off this expensive bandwagon.

Contra dissidents end Honduras mutiny

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI)-A mutiny by about 2,000 Nicaraguan rebels at a southern Honduran base camp has all but collapsed, leaving the Contras' top military chief, Enrique Bermudez, in firm control of the guerrilla army, Contra officials and Western diplomats said Wednesday.

Several dozen dissident rebel commanders had signed a statement recognizing the authority of Bermudez and the Contra high command by late Tuesday, they said. The exact number of the signatories was not available.

Only several hundred troops continued the revolt at Yamales, 60 miles east of the Honduran capital.

The U.S.-backed Contras have fought for seven years to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, mostly from camps just across the Nicaraguan border in Honduras.

The mutineers' leader, Diogenes Hernandez Membreno, conceded defeat from Miami, saying in a telephone interview, "This represents an end to our efforts in Yamales and...a setback for the resistance."

"The Hondurans and the CIA are supporting Bermudez, and so what could we do?" Hernandez asked. "We had no

Hernandez was seized by the Honduran military and expelled to the United States Friday. He was the eighth dissident Contra commander to be expelled from Honduras in a week, the target of an apparent Honduran government strategy to support Bermudez in his struggle to retain power.

A 60-day cease-fire agreement between Contras and the Nicaraguan government expires at the end of May.

Canada to introduce free trade bill

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Conservative government announced Wednesday it will introduce legislation next week to implement the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement, an event expected to set off one of the stormiest debates in the history of Parliament.

International Trade Minister John Crosbie told reporters outside Parliament the legislation would be introduced Tuesday.

Earlier Wednesday, the government presented legislation containing the tax and tariff changes required under the freetrade agreement. Parliament is expected to vote on that measure either Friday or Tuesday.

The Canadian and U.S. governments earlier this year signed the free trade agreement that would eliminate most tariffs and barriers to cross-border trade in goods and services over a 10year period beginning Jan. 1.

The agreement must be approved by the U.S. Senate and Canada's Parliament before it takes effect.

The agreement establishes a unique tribunal for resolving trade-related disputes.

About 30 Canadian laws must be amended to reflect provisions of the agreement. The government will either gather all amendments into one omnibus trade bill or introduce separate

Only the Conservative government, which has 208 of 282 seats in the elected House of Commons, supports the proposal. Both the Liberals and left-wing New Democrats oppose it, charging it reduces Canada's ability to make its own economic decisions.

Debate in Parliament is expected to focus on the sovereignty

The government hopes to pass the legislation before an expected fall election.

If the legislation is approved by the House of Commons, it then is sent to the Senate, dominated by Liberals. The Senate could approve the measure, amend it or reject it outright.

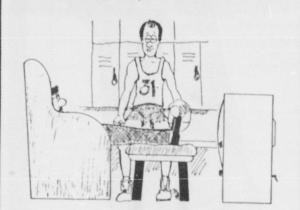

Under U.S. law, the free-trade agreement is killed if either the United States or Canada fail to approve it by Jan. 1.

Another obstacle to implementing the agreement is the opposition of provincial governments in Ontario and Manitoba, whose leaders are concerned over provisions such as liquor board practices that fall under their jurisdiction.

ments, has undertaken since Reagan has been in office.

The Reagan Administration has tightened the act and "used the act to limit information that was available before there was a Freedom of Information Act," he said.

Now, not only is national security information classified, but so is information dealing with economic competitiveness, scientific data, interagency memos, visa applications and the list goes on, according to Edwards.

The Fairness Doctrine, a Federal Communications Commission regulation ordering broadcasters to present various sides of controversial issues, was another area dealing with the role of the press in our society that Edwards expressed concern with during his speech.

The first amendment does not say that the press must be fair,

"If I am a good journalist, why am I against fairness? I'm not against fairness. I am against a government order to be fair,"

There is another reason for opposing the Fairness Doctrine, according to Edwards. News organizations avoided controversial issues because they did not want to be burdened with providing all sides of the issue, "and the result was very bland journalism," he said.

On the other side of the coin, O'Fallon said some groups favor the Fairness Doctrine.

'They feel that in order to achieve an appropriate level of debate, the government must be more alert to opportunities to intervene in ways that promote public discussion," he said.

The basic function of the press is to sustain and promote that robust, open debate that is crucial to the operation of a democratic society," O'Fallon said in explaining the role of the press in our constitutionally governed society.

Payton hopes to impress Thompson at Olympic trials

By SHAWN SCHOEFFLER of the Barometer

John Thompson, the head coach for the U.S. Olympic men's basketball team, recently said he wants to build a basketball team, not

This is good news for Oregon State guard Gary Payton, who left Wednesday morning for Colorado Springs, Colo., where the tryouts

"Coach Thompson is looking for players who are coachable and want to work hard," Payton said. "You can't have an all-star team because then people will worry about themselves and not the team.'

The tryouts began Wednesday and will continue for seven days. Out of that group, 20 finalists will emerge and Thompson will pick a 12-man, two-alternate roster just before the

At least eight players of the 95 invited turned down invitations to the tryouts to be held at the U.S. Olympic Training Center, but those planning to attend represent the best amateur talent in the country.

Payton is the first to admit that there will be several quality ball players at the tryouts, but feels his chances to make the team are as good as anyone's.

"I feel my chances of making the team are pretty good right now," Payton said. "I got a better chance than anybody because I work hard and don't worry about getting the shot every time down the court.'

Thompson is looking for a group of players who play similar to the style that his teams at Georgetown have played. The Hoyas have been a defensive-oriented team that relies on depth to wear down opponents.

'It's (Thompson's style of basketball) just like here," Payton said. "It's the same philosophy to play defense and work hard."

"He really wants a team to play defense and have his style of play," Payton added. "I'm going to go out and play how I play at

The 6-foot-3 Payton averaged 14.5 points and led the Pacific 10 Conference with 7.4 assists and 2.3 steals per game for the Beavers this past season. He had 230 assists, breaking his own school record established his freshman year.

He was named to the All Pac-10 team this year and won the Pac-10 Defensive Player of the Year award his freshman year. He still realizes, however, that the eastern ball players get more attention, but looks to the Olympic trials as a way to gain some much- the pros," Payton said. "I haven't ever believe that Oregon State is a great basket-

"You have to prove yourself when you get a chance," Payton said. "People don't think the guys in the west are that good, but Sean Elliot proved them wrong and when the chance comes upon you, you have to play well."

Payton is one of the youngest players chosen for the trials, but he doesn't feel it's a positive or negative difference.

"It doesn't make any difference if you're a senior or a sophomore because they know you can play," he said. "All that matters is who will play the hardest.'

Payton has always been a hard worker and strives on being a dominant defensive player. During the last couple weeks he has been working on his jump shot but, other than that, he hasn't done anything special.

"People will know I can penetrate and pass," Payton said. "I've been working on my jump shot because that's one thing they'll know I need to improve."

Several quality ball players are trying out for the team, with two-time All-American Danny Manning heading the list. Both Arizona and Oklahoma had four players invited, while seven schools had three players given a chance to make the squad.

David Robinson, College Player of the Year in 1987, is also trying out for the team despite being the first choice in last year's NBA draft. He's currently serving a military obligation and, therefore, can try out for the Payton picked his starting five as Manning, Robinson, J.R. Reid and Hersey Hawkins, but had a tough time picking the point-guard position. He feels he stands a great chance, but also gave credit to Pooh Richardson and Steve Kerr.

"I would like to see myself in there," Payton said. "They need somebody who would control the team to finish off the starting five. I feel I could fill that position."

Does he think he can be the leader of a team that's as loaded with talent as any team that has entered the Olympics for the United

"Yes, I think so," Payton said. "They'll be looking for a point guard who will control the game and give the ball to the players who can score. I won't try to score - it isn't my

Even though young people all over the world dream about being in the Olympics and representing their country, Payton hasn't thought about being an Olympian.

OSU's Gary Payton drives on the University of Washington's Troy Morrell in a late season game. Payton, along with the University of Oregon's Anthony Taylor, are among 93 players vying for the 12 spots on the mens U.S. Olympic Basketball Team.

thought about the Olympics, but I'm starting ball school to help future recruiting. to feel the hype of it.'

Payton wants to make the Olympic team not only for individual status, but also to prove to the public that the East Coast isn't the only place basketball is played. His "All I ever thought about was making it to number-one goal, however, is to make people

"I want to make the squad for Oregon State," Payton said. "I want people to know we got ball players on the West Coast."

"It's all politics about the big name, East Coast Players," he added. "I might not be known, but I'll be known eventually."

Beavers ride Sipple's arm to 1-0 victory over UP, face 'Zags tonight

By CAMERON SCHETTER of the Barometer

Larry Vladic drove in Lance Rice from first base with an RBI triple in the fourth inning and John Sipple hurled a four-hitter to give Oregon State a 1-0 victory over the University of Portland Thursday afternoon at the Pacific-10 Northern Division tournament in Spokane, Wash.

The Beavers next opponent will be the Gonzaga Bulldogs. The Bulldogs defeated Portland State last night 7-4 in 15 innings. OSU and Gonzaga will play tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Indian Wednesday's hero for OSU was Sipple. The senior lefthander scattered four hits and struck out two batters en route to his sixth victory against three losses on the season. Sipple issued five bases on balls, but three of them were intentional passes.

By holding the Pilots scoreless, Sipple ran his consecutive scoreless inning streak to 31 innings, and has yielded only one run in his last 42 innings. Sipple has now shutout the Pilots, Washington, Portland State and Eastern Washington in his last

The Beavers could only manage four hits off of Pilot starter Kevin Reardon, who fell to 3-5, but the Beavers put two of those hits together to score their lone run. With one out in the fourth inning, Rice singled. After a flyout, Vladic delivered a triple in the gap in right center to score Rice from first base and gave Vladic his second game-winning hit of the season.

With the loss, the Pilots dropped to 27-22 on the season. Portland will face Portland State this morning at 11:30 a.m. in the
