Fifty show up to see county candidates spar

By ALAN LITCHFIELD
of the Barometer

Answering questions and discussing issues, all four candidates for the Benton County Commissioner's office met in a forum at the LaSells Stewart Center Tuesday night.

Also invited to the forum were the Corvallis City Council candidates vying for the nine positions available. About 50 community members attended the session, which followed a question-and-answer format.

"Do we have an overall plan to address these issues, or are we a community grabbing for short-term band-aid issues?"

—Pam Folts

The county commissioner candidates are competing for the two four-year positions open. The third seat on the commission is not up for election this year.

The candidates were allowed two minutes to respond to questions that had been submitted in advance. After responding to these questions, audience members were allowed to ask their own questions of the candidates.

Candidates fielding questions were Republican incumbent Charlene Carr and Democrat Pam Folts, both of whom are vying for Position Two of the commissioner's office. Republican John Dilworth and Democrat Calvin Henry are running for Position Three.

"My vision of the library of tomorrow looks nothing like the library of today."

—John Dilworth

Among the issues discussed was the possibility of supporting a proposed 50-bed correctional facility in Benton County. Both Dilworth and Carr spoke in favor of the proposal.

"This type of facility has been found to be the most effective correctional alternative," Carr said. "It's also less expensive."

According to Dilworth, present jail facilities are consistently full, and spaces for offenders are sometimes not available. The result is that many offenders are allowed to return to the streets because they cannot be accommodated.

Folts said she does not oppose the plan, and suggested the proposal be subjected to further investigation.

"Do we have an overall plan to address these issues, or are we a community grabbing for short-term band-aid issues?" she asked.

Another topic covered was the fate of the Corvallis-Benton County Library, which has been perceived as inadequate and too small. All the candidates called for library support and stressed its importance.

The forum, held before a crowd of 50, gave the audience an opportunity to ask questions of the candidates.

"The county should be up front and open to people and support library services in this area," Henry said.

According to Folts, an important part of being a commissioner is being actively involved in the library board and attending all of the board's meetings.

"My vision of the library of tomorrow looks nothing like the library of today," Dilworth said. "Benton County residents are very heavy library users."

Six of the nine candidates for Corvallis City Council were also present, and each spoke briefly on issues and prime objectives. Those who were present were Kent Daniels, Edgar Bolden, Stewart Wershow, Stewart Branam, Jim McDaniel and William Hoffman.

Those who could not attend were Bill Cohnstaedt, Richard Gretz and Bill Soulier.

All of the positions for city council are unopposed, a situation which some of the candidates commented on in their short introductions.

"The fact that I am running unopposed means that there is no dialogue on the issues. I think that is very detrimental to the democratic process," Daniels said. Daniels is running for Ward Two of the city council.

The forum was sponsored by the League of Women Voters and the OSU political science department.

Davis expresses opposition to semesters

By CHRIS LAMOUREAUX
of the Barometer

The Calendar Conversion Council, which is overseeing the change from the present quarter system calendar to the 1990 semester system calendar, met yesterday afternoon to discuss their options.

One of the items that doesn't seem to be an option, according to Jack Davis, chairman of the council, is retaining the present quarter system.

The feeling that the council conveyed in its meeting was that the conversion is still uncertain. And although the Oregon State Board of Higher Education intends to follow through with the conversion, Davis said he feels that it would be detrimental for OSU.

In a personal report submitted last week to Graham Spanier, vice president for academic affairs, Davis said, "My first recommendation is to retain the quarter system ... I have not uncovered any compelling reasons for conversion to semesters; on the contrary, there appear to be no sound educational reasons and many disadvantages. Even Richard Nixon admitted our mistake in Vietnam and pulled out."

Davis also pointed out that students at the University of California at Berkeley prefer the semester system only because of its slower pace, and that UCLA rejected the idea of a semester system after considerable study.

Still, "the board hasn't indicated at all that it might reconsider its earlier decision," Davis said.

The Oregon State Legislature, according to Davis, probably won't try to overturn the OSBHE's decision. He said that they are through dealing with the issue. ASOSU representative Shauna Heinrich, however, felt that there were still some legislators on the side of OSU students and others who opposed the change, who don't want a semester conversion and will hopefully introduce legislation to reverse the board's decision.

Heinrich said she thought that students don't want the conversion to take place, citing the fact that one of the semester conversion options would require students to take final exams for fall semester immediately following a two-week winter break. She also said that teachers won't want to come back and give finals after the break.

But, assuming that the semester switch will take place, Davis said that Spanier asked him to issue a survey asking students and faculty which semester conversion calendar they would favor. There are two options.

The first option is an early semester calendar, which would mean students would start school a month earlier and get out a month earlier. With this option, finals week would be scheduled before winter break.

The second option would be the late semester, where students would start and finish school the same time they presently do, but finals week would be held after the two-week winter break.

During recent hearings held in Salem and Eugene, those who testified spoke in favor of retaining the quarter system. But, if they did have to make a choice regarding the late or early semester system, they favored the late semester.

Beaver Hut closes doors, cites bad business

By ALAN LITCHFIELD
of the Barometer

The troubled Beaver Hut tavern closed its doors over the weekend and will not be reopened, a longtime employee said yesterday.

Owner Gary Baker converted his bar to an under-21 club and stopped serving alcohol last September to accommodate the majority of the OSU campus — an idea that didn't seem to work.

However, on Oct. 4, he went back to serving beer and wine again, a move that also failed to boost business.

According to Nick Till, who worked at the tavern for two years, the main reason for the shutdown was a lack of patronage.

Till said an article printed in the Daily Barometer on Sept. 30, which announced the Beaver Hut's return to alcohol sales, projected an attitude on Baker's part that was not exactly how the owner felt. He maintained that the article lessened community support and hurt business tremendously.

"I find it odd that people could take it to heart that much," Till said. "In a larger town like Portland, no one would think anything of it, but Corvallis is such a small town."

In the article, Baker was quoted as saying, "As far as I'm concerned, if they (Corvallis Police) wanted to do it right, they should start at the top of the fraternity list and go down the street and bust every one of them" for serving alcohol to minors.

In past years, the tavern had been a popular night spot for fraternity and sorority members, as well as other student groups.

According to Till, the article projected the wrong attitude to students and caused the decline in patronage. Baker was not mad at students, but rather at the way the system works, Till said.

Baker also expressed his disappointment with local minors who ignored his club when it went dry, saying, "As far as I'm concerned, the whole under-21 crowd can go drop in a hole."

In addition, Baker stated that whatever drinking problems local youths face are the fault of District Attorney Peter Sandrock and OSU Vice President for Student Affairs Jo Anne Trow.

According to Till, Baker is not in any position to make a decision on the future of the property. There are many avenues he could take, he said.

Till said Baker will wait to see if "interested parties" make an offer and then he will make a decision later. He added that Baker has not filed for bankruptcy and has not yet considered doing so. Baker has filed for bankruptcy in the past, but has managed to keep the business operative, he said.

Till did mention there are people looking at the lot. In one case, the potential buyer may level the building and use the property for storage. However, since there has been no sale, no definite plans have been made.

The Oregon Bank, through which Baker conducts his financial affairs, declined to give any information concerning the business.

Baker could not be reached for comment.

Owner Baker is not the only person having to plan for the future — the closing of the bar has affected many people, Till said. Those who are out of work will have to find new jobs and some may have to move out of town, he said.

"A lot more people got hurt, not just him," he said.

Homecoming Week going, OSU-USC game to be finale

By CASSANDRA WOZNIAK
of the Barometer

This year's theme for Homecoming is "Splinter the Trojans," setting the tempo for this week's activities and Saturday's football game against the University of Southern California on Saturday.

At halftime, the OSU marching band will entertain the crowd with a show that will feature passes over Parker Stadium by authentic World War II fighter planes, and the Homecoming Court will be escorted in cars through the stadium. Last year's king and queen will present the crown to this year's winners.

According to Ken Ossinger, MUPC all-university events chairperson, a few activities will be conducted differently this year.

"We're going to be announcing the king and queen of the Homecoming Court at the bonfire this Friday night, instead of at the beginning of the week like we've done in the past," he said.

Ossinger and Pahl are hoping more people will attend this year's bonfire, which will be held Friday at 8 p.m. on 14th Street and Washington Way.

"We've been trying to involve the Corvallis community by circulating information about the activities taking place this week to hopefully increase the number of people at the bonfire," Pahl said.

Pahl and Ossinger are confident there will be increased attendance at this year's bonfire and Homecoming game due to the All-Sports Pass and the fact that the football team is playing better than expected this year.

It is also the 60th anniversary of the Memorial Union, and Pahl and Ossinger anticipate this will bring more alumni than usual to campus to participate in activities.

"We would also like to let the students know about the parade which takes place directly before the bonfire at 6:30 p.m. on Friday. The parade will begin at the MU and finish at the site of the bonfire," Ossinger said.

Included in the parade will be the Homecoming Court, last year's king and queen, and floats made by living groups that will be judged Friday afternoon, Pahl said.

Solar-powered prototype car will be on display today

By CAROLE GIBBS
of the Barometer

The "Pace Car of the Future" and winner of the Australian World Solar Challenge can be seen in the Electrical and Computer Engineering building today from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The General Motors Sunraycer, a solar-powered car, finished two and one-half — more than 600 miles — ahead of its nearest competitor in the Australian race in November 1987. It also led the Pasadena Tournament of Roses Parade last Jan. 1.

The vehicle is on a national tour of auto shows, engineering, technical and solar energy conferences, and university, high school and grade school campuses. The Sunraycer's specially designed one-seat, four-wheeled, teardrop shape "represents the development and demonstration of advanced technology," and gives it extremely low aerodynamic drag with good stability in crosswinds, according to a GM press release.

"GM Sunraycer is a triumph of teamwork and technology. What we have learned from Sunraycer may be useful in solar powered, electric, or other kinds of vehicles," said Roger B. Smith, chairman of GM, in the release.

According to GM President Robert C. Stempel, the company hopes to inspire high school and university students to pursue technical and scientific educations.

"We intend to utilize the Sunraycer to generate interest in engineering education — a national priority," he said.

Representative from Cascade AIDS Project to speak at panel discussion

By CATHRYN STEPHENS
of the Barometer

An OSU graduate who has acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) will participate in a panel discussion this Thursday. The discussion, called "AIDS: Are You Sure You're Not At-Risk?" is part of AIDS Awareness and Prevention Month. According to Cheryl Graham, health educator for the Student Health Center, AIDS victims are becoming more common in the heterosexual community.

"There really aren't that many heterosexuals who have AIDS in Oregon at this time, so we don't have many to draw from (for speakers)," Graham said.

Ed Hickey, who graduated from OSU in 1983, is one such victim and will speak about his personal experience with AIDS. He represents an organization called the Cascade AIDS Project, located in Portland.

The group, which is concerned mainly with AIDS education, is funded mostly by private donations and also by the State Health Division, the Multnomah County Health Division and United Way.

The panel, which will meet at noon in MU 105, will also include Dr. Lizbeth Gray, an assistant professor of counseling and guidance education, and Dr. Marie Saracino, an assistant professor of human development and family studies.

"The students appear to have a real significant knowledge base, but they're still using risky behavior — specifically multiple sexual partners," Graham said.

Gray and Saracino recently completed a study of OSU students' AIDS-related knowledge and behavior in which approximately 500 OSU students were questioned.

"Students tend to know about AIDS and how it is contracted, but they don't apply it to themselves."

—Cheryl Graham

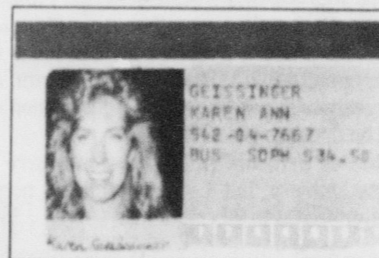

"Students tend to know about AIDS and how it is contracted, but they don't apply it to themselves," Graham said. "To be able to influence their behavior, it looks like they're going to have to know someone with AIDS first."

Graham finds this information alarming because although AIDS has not made its way far into the Oregon heterosexual community, it will not be much longer before many people know someone with AIDS.

"I think there will be an appeal to the students' emotional side," Graham said, referring to Hickey's presentation. "They'll see that 'I could be that person.' Hopefully that will translate into behavior change."

Support schools, rivers: yes on 2; yes on 7

BALLOT MEASURE 2

Question: Shall Oregon Constitution allow Common School Fund investment in stocks, and payment of state lands management expenses from investment income?

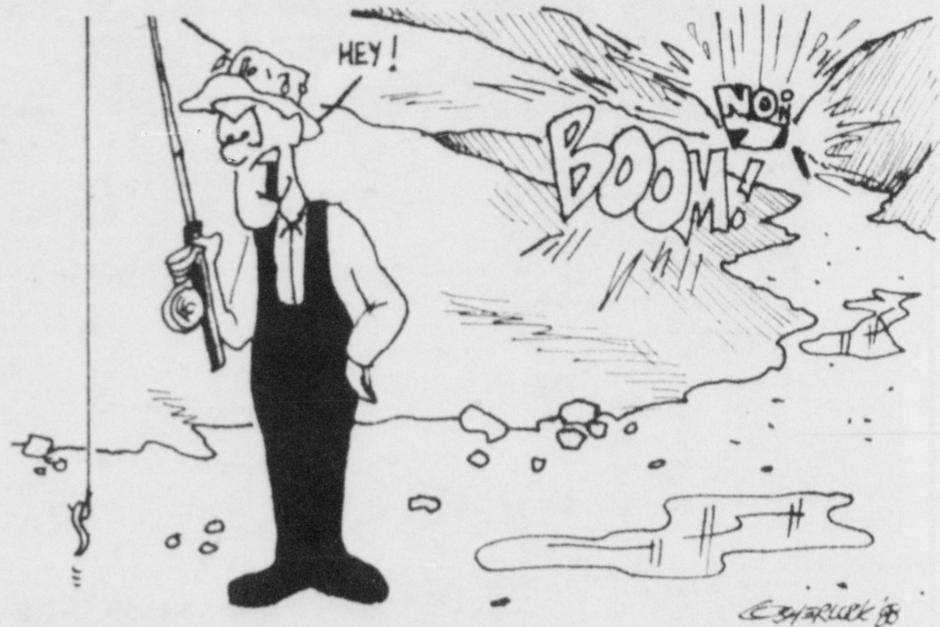

We say: yes. Passage of Measure 2 is likely to pay off for schools and taxpayers by increasing the portion distributed to schools from the Common School Fund. Current distributions from the CSF to schools amount to about $24.1 million; Measure 2 could increase that amount to an estimated $36.3 million. Help increase funding for education in Oregon. Vote YES on 2.

BALLOT MEASURE 7

Question: Shall Oregon law

designate more river sections as scenic waterways?

We say: yes. Measure 7 provides protection from dams, placer mining and other potentially harmful development for a number of Oregon river sections. The cost to Oregonians will be minute and the benefit could be substantial. Measure 7 will help preserve scenic beauty, and opportunities to fish, hunt, boat, watch wildlife and hike; in short, passage of the measure will protect that which makes Oregon unique — the beauty and health of her environment. Help Oregon rivers stay beautiful for the benefit of future generations. Vote YES on 7. (CC)

AIDS: you needn't be gay or hooked to be at risk

By CHERYL GRAHAM
for the Barometer

A few weeks ago I received a letter from an OSU student who asked me to reprint an article I wrote on AIDS last October. The student told me that he cut it out and gave it to several friends whose lifestyles concerned him.

But the reason for his letter to me was more urgent than concern. He said, "I just learned that my cousin is infected with the AIDS virus. She was shocked because she isn't male, homosexual or an IV drug abuser. I'm scared because there are so many people just like my cousin — and I admit, like me — who believe that it won't happen to them. Please, Ms. Graham, reprint that article you wrote which convinced me that you don't have to be gay or hooked on drugs to get AIDS."

As a matter of personal policy, I won't have the article reprinted in its entirety, but I will reprint the portions that I suspect were significant to this student:

One of the toughest questions of my professional career has been whether it's a health educator's role to merely impart facts or whether it is also appropriate to prescribe behavior in accordance with those facts (and thus "impose" my values on those who disagree with me). I still wrestle with this question every time I have to write or present on a topic that is value-laden.

But I wrestle less strenuously now that I've met Tony (not his real name). In the few months that have passed since his sister married one of my brothers, I have come to know and love Tony. He has AIDS.

Just three weeks ago I sat in Tony's kitchen talking about life. Life is an important conversational topic of Tony's because his is slipping away from him. You can tell by looking at him that he's dying — there's just something about the appearance of someone who is dying....

Anyway, I asked Tony whether it would have changed his behavior if someone had told him that indiscriminate sex can result in this deadly disease, AIDS (which wasn't even identified when he was most heavily involved in his previously promiscuous lifestyle).

He admitted that he's not sure, but asked me to consider the following scenario if for no other reason than to address my own quandary.

"Imagine not knowing that cars can injure and kill if they hit you," Tony said. "Further imagine that your friends know this but don't want to tell you because they know how much you enjoy playing in the street."

Well, you get the point.

What I love most about Tony is his spirit. He doesn't blame a soul for the fact that he's dying from this dreadful disease. But he says with glassy eyes and sadness in his voice that he hopes others don't have to get AIDS or know someone with it before they are willing to believe that the message about prevention applies to each of us.

And that's the good news — AIDS is preventable. You don't even have to join a nunnery or a monastery to feel safe and secure from the virus.

What is important to remember is that identification with a group of people (i.e., homosexuals or IV drug abusers) is not what transmits AIDS. Behavior transmits AIDS.

And contrary to what you may have previously believed, it's not just homosexual behavior that transmits AIDS. So does heterosexual behavior. In fact, the only way to be safe from the virus is to not share needles (or anything else, like toothbrushes) that can have blood on them and have a sexual relationship with only one person.

One national expert on AIDS has stated rather clearly that there is simply no longer room in our world for casual sex. Another expert graphically explained why: when you have sex with someone, you have sex with whomever that person has had sex with for the past six to 10 years.

But the Surgeon General of the United States was perhaps most clear about it when he said that the safest scenario is a committed relationship with a single sexual partner — monogamy.

Monogamy does not mean one sexual partner this year and another next year. It means one sexual partner for life. Apart from this scenario, the phrase "safe sex" is really a misnomer. Anything else can be nothing more than "safer sex."

There used to be a time when (religion aside — even cultural) non-marital sex was a moral issue. The "sexual revolution" changed that for much of America, but AIDS has brought sex back into the moral/ethical arena. AIDS has created a moral issue much more basic than non-marital sex: It's the morality/ethics involved in (maybe) sharing a lethal virus that you may not even know you have.

The Centers for Disease Control estimate that by 1992 (less than four years from now), AIDS will be the number one killer of young adults.

It's time for each person to assess his or her risk of getting (or having) the virus and to act accordingly. A program designed to help you assess personal risk will be offered at noon on Thursday in MU 105. The program titled, "AIDS: Are You Sure You're Not at Risk?" is free and open to everyone. The program is being offered in conjunction with National AIDS Awareness and Prevention Month.

Graham is the health educator at the OSU Student Health Center.

LETTERS

Case still stands

To the editor:

Luke Anavi's Oct. 14 "rebuttal" to Stephen Pollard's letter supporting Measure 8 is a classic example of an ad hominem attack: When you can't refute someone's position, attempt to impugn his character or his motivations.

Stephen Pollard's letter listed some cogent reasons (with documentation) for supporting Measure 8, to wit: The Governor's Executive Order was a political payoff for the activist homosexual community's support of his gubernatorial campaign; there were no cases of discrimination in the executive branch of state government for the order to rectify, and the activist homosexual community see this executive order as a springboard for future legislation and full minority status, including affirmative action for homosexual behavior.

Mr. Anavi did not address these issues at all. Instead he embarked on a diatribe against Mr. Pollard's religious beliefs and supposed "hidden agenda". Mr. Pollard's presumed motivations (or Mr. Anavi's for that matter) are irrelevant to the question at issue, which is: Did Mr. Pollard make a good case for support of Measure 8 in his Oct. 11 letter? It is apparent that Mr. Anavi was not able to refute his letter. Therefore, I must conclude that Mr. Pollard's case still stands.

Enough of misinformation

To the editor:

Enough of misinformation. First the Barometer runs an editorial (last Wednesday), and then a stream of letters appear, urging opposition to Ballot Measure 8 by claiming it is discriminatory. This is in the great political tradition of persuasion by supplying misinformation.

Here are the facts, instead. According to the Oregon State Attorney General's office, Measure 8 is not discriminatory and could not be used for discrimination. According to the Oregon State Supreme Court, Measure 8 is not discriminatory and could not be used to support discrimination. According to the Oregon Stat Voter's Pamphlet Committee, Measure 8 is not discriminatory nor could it help anyone in discrimination.

Whatever Measure 8 may be, it is not discriminatory, nor could it be used to support discrimination, according to those in the best position to judge such matters from a legal and constitutional viewpoint.

What Measure 8 does is to give the people of Oregon a chance to take back a right that Governor Goldschmidt decided belonged to him: the right to make the law.

Personally, I intend to vote for Measure 8, for two reasons. First, I do not believe in public officials making new Constitutional law by fiat; this is not democracy. Secondly, the Governor's Executive Order is, in very fact, the first step in a strategy by homosexuals to secure special rights (according to their own leaders). In this country, no one should have special rights.

The Oregon Constitution provides protection for everyone. Vote for Measure 8 and reclaim the rights of the people.

Reagan B-league player?

To the editor:

I was intrigued by the logic of the recent letter from Chemistry Graduate Student Robert W. Smith. I would like to press his test, the "experience gap," a step further. "George Bush was elected to the House of Representatives twice...." (The writer doesn't say he lost his bid for the Senate to Lloyd Bentsen.) Ronald Reagan had no Congressional experience. "George Bush served as ambassador to the United Nations and as the first American envoy to China." Ronald Reagan had no foreign affairs experience. "George Bush built a successful oil business in Texas...." Ronald Reagan had no business experience. If "Mike Dukakis is not even in the same league with George Bush," is the writer in his silent way not expecting us to come to the obvious conclusion: Governor Ronald Reagan should never have been elected president? I'm sure all right-thinking Americans and thoughtful members of the OSU community will see the "logic" of what Mr. Smith is silently proposing. As Mr. Smith says, "Why pick a B league player when you can have a major league all-star?" This is obviously a veiled reference to the fact that Ronald Reagan starred in B movies. Does that make him a "B league player"? I for one resent the slurs against our president.

Dismayed about coverage

To the editor:

During the present campaign I have been discouraged by the lack of foresight and creativity demonstrated by our society's leaders and would-be leaders, as well as appalled by the hypocrisy of candidates whose appeal is to ethics and morality when their past actions suggest their own ethics and morality leave much to be desired.

George Bush recently gave a lecture on ethics at a Seattle University. This coming from a man who has done more to compromise America's own ethics and values through his involvement in today's Iran-Contra scandal and yesterday's subversive operations against other autonomous republics as director of the C.I.A.

But of greater concern is the dismay I feel towards the media coverage of the candidates. Poll after poll has been conducted with the results consuming air time and news priority. The media of this country must be more responsible in their influential position on voter turnout and choice.

I'd like to hear less of what Frank Vacumehoover of Lintown thinks of the candidates and more of how Bush plans to freeze taxes, build the military, and be the Education President. Doug Henning step aside!!

Don't be influenced by media hype, be true to your beliefs and values and choose a candidate who can best represent all Americans. Please vote on November 8. Every vote does count.

Dukakis slates TV appearances

Polls show Bush lead increasing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — George Bush's lead over Michael Dukakis was in solid double-digits in new national polls Tuesday — a gap that the Democratic presidential candidate sought to close in the final two weeks of the campaign with a blitz of network television appearances.

The public opinion surveys were released as Dukakis prepared to appear in a live 90-minute interview on ABC's "Nightline," during which he was to answer questions from host Ted Koppel. Bush declined to appear.

A new Gallup poll of 1,232 registered voters, conducted Oct. 21-23, had Bush leading Dukakis by 10 points, 50 percent to 40 percent, with 10 percent undecided or supporting others. The survey, which gave Bush a six-point lead two weeks ago, had a three-point margin of error.

A Los Angeles Times poll, taken late last week and published Tuesday, showed Bush leading by 11 points in California, a critical state whose 47 electoral votes are the largest in the nation.

That poll was bad news for Dukakis because it is widely believed even among supporters that he cannot win the White House without carrying California. Asked in California what he planned to do in light of the new poll, Dukakis said, "We're going to work hard. We're going to win."

Quayle's law license application sought

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — A lawyer said Tuesday he has asked the Indiana Supreme Court to release the law license application of Republican vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle to resolve questions over Quayle's law school performance.

"Whenever you apply for a law license, you need to say if you ever have been involved in any activity which casts doubt over your integrity as a lawyer," attorney Amedeo Greco said. "Quayle filled out a nine-page application when he applied to become a lawyer."

Greco contends the application is public information but said he was unable to obtain it from the Indiana Board of Law Examiners. He said a clerk told him internal rules prevent release of the information, so he asked the Supreme Court to release the information.

"The attorney general in Indiana some time ago ruled that when you apply for a license, that's a public record," Greco said. "All I'm asking for is the application, nothing else."

Greco said he was involved with neither the Republican nor Democratic parties but wanted to resolve questions about Quayle.

"There have been rumors about what he did or didn't do in law school. These rumors may be true or untrue. I think he has an affirmative obligation to release it (the application) himself," Greco said. "His application will show whether these rumors are true or not."

Greco said the rumors about Quayle concerned whether he was disciplined for plagiarism and for having someone else take examinations for him.

"If these rumors are not true, he should have no objection over release of his application," Greco said.

Helicopter crash kills eight drug fighters

OCOTILLO, Calif. (UPI) — A National Guard helicopter patrolling the Mexican border for drug smugglers apparently hit a power line and crashed, killing the five sheriff's deputies and three guardsmen aboard, authorities said Tuesday.

The Huey helicopter crashed at 9:30 p.m. Monday in the desert near Interstate 8 outside of Ocotillo, 85 miles east of San Diego, bursting into flames, Imperial County Assistant Sheriff Ted Whitmer said.

The eight men killed were the first air surveillance team involved with Operation Border Ranger, a joint anti-drug smuggling operation by sheriff's departments in six Southern California counties, the National Guard and federal authorities, Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Bryan Williams said.

The California National Guard earlier reported that the aircraft was chasing suspected drug smugglers, but that information was later determined to be incorrect, Whitmer said.

National Guard Staff Sgt. Phil Jordan said the helicopter had spotted a vehicle parked with its lights off on a remote road in the Mountain Springs Grade area and was descending to take a closer look when it crashed.

Japan fears suicides

TOKYO (UPI) — There are fears there will be a wave of suicides across Japan upon the death of Emperor Hirohito, 87, particularly among those who feel strongly attached to the country's longest-reigning monarch and the imperial system.

Although most Japanese no longer view harakiri as an honorable way to show devotion to one's country, as wartime kamikaze pilots did, or to protect personal dignity, many still see it as an acceptable way to deal with professional failure or private grief.

"I think it is possible some right-wing Japanese could commit suicide in a rather spectacular way in front of the Imperial Palace or at the headquarters of some right-wing organization," said social commentator Masao Kunihiro.

Japanese call such suicides "junshi," the ancient tradition of following one's leader into death. At the death in 1912 of Hirohito's grandfather, Emperor Meiji, Gen. Maresuke Nogi and his wife committed junshi by disembowelment.

Takeshi Okaniwa, a sociology professor at Tokyo's Hitotsubashi University, said that while junshi is possible today, it does not mesh as neatly with the psyche of Japan as it once did.

"Japanese people are more self-centered nowadays," Okaniwa said. "They would put themselves first, not the emperor."

Hustler wins case

PORTLAND (UPI) — An Oregon anti-pornography crusader who was ridiculed in an issue of Hustler magazine lost her latest round in a legal battle against the publication in a decision handed down Tuesday.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed the dismissal of a lawsuit by Peggy Ault handed down by U.S. District Judge Helen Frye in Portland, Ore., but it reversed Frye's imposition of legal fees and sanctions on Ault for filing a frivolous claim.

Ault sued Hustler for invasion of privacy, libel and intentional infliction of emotional distress after she was named in the April 1985 issue in a monthly feature called "Asshole of the Month."

A small photograph of Ault was superimposed over a cartoon drawing of the backside of a bent-over naked man.

Ault was featured because as leader of Citizens in Action for Clackamas County, Ore., she organized opposition to an adult video store. She also is involved in a lobbying group called Citizens for Legislation Against Decadence.

Ault's lawsuit was dismissed on March 9, 1987. The three-member appeal court panel, in a unanimous opinion written by Justice Thomas Tang, found that however distasteful the Hustler feature might be, it deserved the same First Amendment protection afforded other publications.

The court also agreed with Frye's determination that Ault's claims were "not applicable when a person's picture is used to illustrate a non-commercial, newsworthy article."

Officials oppose Measure 8

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Oregon Labor Commissioner Mary Wendy Roberts Monday joined a bandwagon of elected officials who are opposing Ballot Measure 8, which would repeal an order banning discrimination against homosexuals in state government.

"Let's maintain an atmosphere of rationality and fairness," Roberts said. "The ... order reassures state employees that they will be evaluated on their job performance and no other factors. It would be a step backwards to pass Ballot Measure 8."

Among the elected officials who are already opposing the measure are Secretary of State Barbara Roberts, Portland Mayor Bud Clark and Gov. Neil Goldschmidt, who signed the order that would be revoked.

Mary Wendy Roberts made her comments on the measure at a news conference with Alice Dale, director of the Oregon Public Employees Union, which represents most state employees.

"During contract negotiations, we had state employees indicating that they experienced discrimination in the workplace because of their sexual orientation," Dale said. "We asked for state employees to come forward and testify that this type of discrimination exists ... but there is too much fear for them to come forward."

Tobacco heir supports anti-smoking measure

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — An heir to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has thrown his support behind Ballot Measure 6, which would ban smoking in most public places in Oregon.

The measure will be decided in the Nov. 8 general election. Patrick Reynolds, 39, grandson of the founder of the tobacco company, said Monday he supports the measure because "thousands of non-smokers are dying of secondhand smoke and this measure will give you a shot at clean air where you shop, eat and work."

He called the measure "farsighted" and said it could set the tone for smoking policies throughout the country.

Reynolds, of Beverly Hills, Calif., said he has been particularly concerned about smoking since his father's death in the 1950s from emphysema. He said he quit smoking 10 years ago.

He said nobody in the Reynolds family has worked for the tobacco company in 40 years.

Reynolds said he spends about two days a week in anti-smoking endeavors.

Frohnmayr seeks donor

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) — The search has expanded to find a bone marrow donor for the daughters of Oregon Attorney General Dave Frohnmayr, who suffer from a rare condition that causes death.

Hundreds of distant relatives in Nova Scotia have been tested to see if their marrow could be used for transplant, and now genealogists are tracing the family's migration through Canada and the United States, Frohnmayr said Monday.

"We know the tissue type came from Nova Scotia," the attorney general said. "But we still don't have a perfect match."

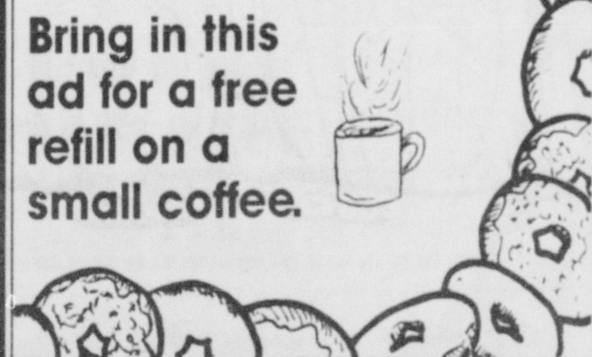

Two of Frohnmayr's daughters, Kirsten, 15, and Katie, 9, suffer from Fanconi's anemia. The disease usually kills its victims before they become adults.

Thus far, the girls are doing well, their father said.

The family traveled to Nova Scotia two years ago to test other Frohnmayr descendants for a possible match.

LaRussa named American League Manager of the Year

NEW YORK (UPI) — Tony LaRussa, who led the Oakland Athletics to a major-league best 104 victories in the regular season, Tuesday was named American League Manager of the Year.

LaRussa received 103 points to easily outdistance Boston's Joe Morgan, who finished second with 89. LaRussa joined Sparky Anderson as the only two-time winner of the award. He first won the award in 1983 as manager of the Chicago White Sox.

In his second season with the A's, LaRussa, 44, guided a team led by young sluggers Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire to the AL West title. The A's swept Morgan's Red Sox in four games to advance to the World Series, where they lost in five games to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Voting was conducted by 28 members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America, two from each AL city, at the conclusion of the regular season.

Others receiving votes were Sparky Anderson of the Detroit Tigers (37), Tom Trebelhorn of the Milwaukee Brewers (15), Tom Kelly of the Minnesota Twins (6), Jim Fregosi formerly with the Chicago White Sox (1) and Lou Piniella formerly of the New York Yankees (1).

Sports Club offers fun for all members

OSU has 22 active sports clubs that students can join and three more are seeking approval to be added to the list.

A sport club is a recognized student organization that provides other colleges and community groups in the Pacific Northwest, with some clubs also competing in California.

The current clubs are badminton, bowling, cycling, equestrian, fencing, field hockey, frisbee, judo, lacrosse, pistol, polo, racquetball, rifle, rodeo, rugby, sailing, skiing, soccer, squash, swimming, tennis, table tennis, triathlon, volleyball and water polo.

Each club has its own practice schedule and is headed by OSU students. Ken Cheung, sports club coordinator, can direct those who are interested to the respective chairperson of each club, by calling 754-3736 or by reaching him at the sports club coordinator's office in Dixon Recreational Center.

Golf team wins tourney

LEWISTON, Idaho—The Oregon State men's golf team won the nine-team University of Idaho Invitational after Tuesday's round as Warren Vickers took medalist honors.

Vickers, from Lewiston, Id., where the tournament was held, shot a 27-round total of 212 to win his second consecutive tournament for the Beavers. He battled back on Tuesday to pass Derk Hannigan of Washington State University for the medalist honors.

Vickers became the first OSU golfer in 17 years to take low medalist honors in a tournament outside of the northwest when he won the Robertson Homes Invitational last week.

OSU finished shot a team score of 869, which put them ahead of second place Washington State by 27 strokes. Washington State II finished third and Boise State and Idaho placed fourth and fifth, respectively.

Steve Altman and Mark Bolton both shot a 219 while Kirby Krupka finished with a 224.

Past winners include Anderson (1984-87), Bobby Cox (1985), and John McNamara (1986).

Morgan took over the Red Sox during the All-Star break with the Red Sox in fourth place at 43-42. The Red Sox won 20 straight at home as the team came on in the second half. The Red Sox won the division with an 89-73 mark.

LaRussa, credited by his team for his quiet demeanor through the course of the season, started managing with the White Sox in 1979. He led the White Sox in 1983 to the AL West title and a 99-63 record. He was fired by the White Sox 64 games into the 1986 season. He then joined the A's where Oakland twice finished in third place.

Being your best

By MATT WEBB
of the Barometer

Everyone has certain characteristics that play a major role in determining his/her athletic abilities. Some characteristics such as size, speed, coordination and cardiovascular efficiency, are inherited and cannot be improved much further.

However, other characteristics such as mental toughness, possessing the proper attitudes, overcoming fears and maintaining good practice habits are factors that can be acquired to increase the athletes' skill level and improve their athletic ability.

Every coach worthy of a chrome-plated whistle has told athletes that all sports are 80 percent mental. But what exactly is the phrase "mental toughness?"

Behind The Seams

By Matt Webb of The Barometer

Mental toughness is the ability to overcome extraordinary pressure in pursuit of excellence. To athletes, the physical assets that God gave them are beyond their control, but how mentally tough they are is completely up to them.

Rare are athletes so superior that they can win on talent alone. The difference between two athletes of near-equal caliber comes down to who is mentally tougher.

Many elements are involved in acquiring the proper attitude. Discipline, productive practice habits, ability to temporarily block out pain, the willingness to try again after defeat, are some of the important characteristics of being mentally tough.

Some athletes may have the greatest physical attributes, but they will never realize full potential if they quit when the odds are against them, if they refuse to practice, or if they are only interested in playing on game days. Since top athletes are separated by slight differences in ability, attitude is often the factor that separate champions from runner-ups and starters from bench-warmers. While being mentally tough is vital, maintaining good practice habits is equally important for every aspiring athlete. They may have been blessed with athletic gifts, but unless the gift is developed, it will go unnoticed.

The old saying, "You play as you practice," reflects the athlete's mental approach. Doing things consistently wrong or sloppily will reinforce bad habits. It would be better to concentrate on a few areas rather than doing everything just to fulfill a coach's order.

Gearing up to train hard every day is not easy, but it is crucial. The first step is to realize that practice requires full attention. While at practice, block out all other thoughts as much as possible and just concentrate on the sport.

The next step is to psyche yourself up before every practice so you are prepared to train with intensity. The goal is to be alert and motivated during practice. Focus on reinforcing good, not bad, habits. Without this focus, time and effort will be wasted.

Occasionally, athletes may also find difficulty in overcoming an unconscious fear of success.

Fear is such a powerful element that it can enable us to succeed or fail. The same fear that gives people super-human power in emergencies, also causes an athlete's muscles to tighten and fail in crucial situations. Basically, fear is a mental problem that results in a physical reaction.

With visualization (a way of previewing performances in your mind), affirmations (positive thoughts about yourself) and hard, consistent training, athletes can overcome this lack of self-confidence.

All things considered, remember that everyone possess a certain amount of athletic ability. Their objective should be to develop that talent to its maximum potential. And how well they do this depends on the price they are willing to pay.

Gregory blossoms after surprise

By RICH PETERSON
of the Barometer

Garin Gregory never planned on getting the chance to play soccer at the collegiate level.

"I was pretty ecstatic," said Gregory, in describing how he felt when it was announced that OSU would have a men's varsity soccer team starting this season. "I thought when I got to college I would pretty much play recreationally."

After 15 games on the varsity team, Gregory is beginning to blossom. In a 9-1 win over Columbia Christian on Oct. 14, the sophomore forward landed a hat-trick, scoring three goals.

"That has really helped me with my confidence," Gregory said. "That has been a real turning point in the season for me."

Since that game, Gregory scored two goals against University of Portland and one against University of Oregon. Before the hat-trick, Gregory felt he was struggling offensively. "I was missing a lot of shots on goal, and it (hat-trick) made me feel a little better."

"When you play different sports, you get a different attitude about each one and it helps you with your concentration,"

—Garin Gregory

Gregory, who has played soccer for 13 years, was a four-year letterman at Portland's Grant High School, earning second-team all-state honors his senior year. In addition to soccer Gregory played basketball and ran track, which he felt were good complements to his soccer ability.

"When you play different sports, you get a different attitude about each one and it helps you with your concentration," Gregory said. "Playing forward, you not only have to play a team game, but there are certain instances where you have to take on one guy by yourself," said Gregory, who leads the team with seven goals and four assists this season.

Gregory likes the learning experience at the collegiate level. "I'm learning a lot from the coach (Jimmy Conway) — stuff I didn't get out of high school." A year off can be a tough adjustment for any athlete in any type of sport. "At the first of the season I played as if I was behind everyone," Gregory said. "I'm just now coming around. The coach has really helped me a lot."

Gregory feels there is a big difference between the club level and playing at the varsity level against NCAA teams. "The teams we played last year were mostly other club teams. It was more for fun. The goal at the collegiate level is to win. I like the competition."

"It was a good win for us to beat Oregon. They have some very experienced players who controlled the ball very well."

—Jimmy Conway

This being its first year, OSU's soccer team is in its building stage, and Gregory knows that to keep a slot on the team, a year of hard work is ahead. Conway will be able to recruit in the next year, something there wasn't time to do in preparation for this season. Gregory knows what lies ahead in the off-season. "This is probably one of the first years I will play all year round," said Gregory. "Right now I am just trying to play as good as I can."

Hat-tricks aren't real common in soccer, especially at the collegiate level. Hopefully in his stride to play to his potential, Gregory will score three goals in one game again.

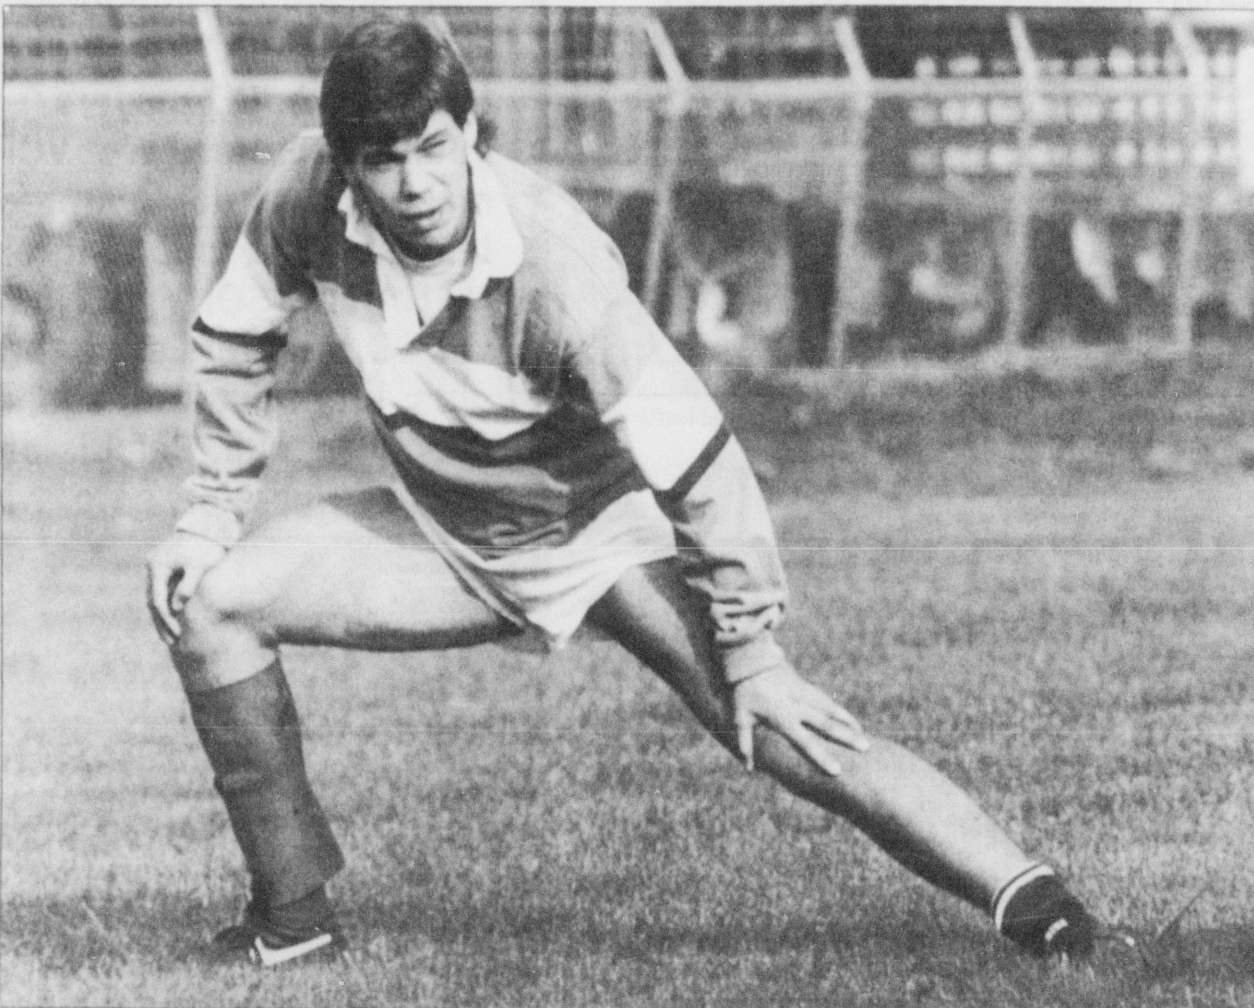

"I just hope I can do it again in the future," said Gregory. The Beavers, 8-6-1, will play at Pacific University in Forest Grove today at 3 p.m. before heading to California this weekend. The Beavers are currently on a three-game winning streak. The Beavers defeated Portland JV 5-1 and University of Oregon 3-2.

"I was quite pleased with the way that both games came out," said Oregon State coach Jimmy Conway, whose main concern is consistency. "We didn't play too well in the middle of first halves in both games. But, we came out in the second half and played a lot better."

"Against Portland we started the game out really well, but, then we slacked up," said Conway. "We came out in the second half and scored on two very well worked goals."

Conway feels the Oregon victory was especially satisfying. "It was a good win for us to beat Oregon. They have some very experienced players who controlled the ball very well. We didn't play very consistently, but we did have to play good to beat them," he said.

Consistency will be the emphasis this week as the Beavers prepare to head south to face California and Stanford. "We are going to have to work on our consistency if we want to do well against the schools in California," Conway said.

SPENCER MCPHERSON - The Daily Barometer

Garin Gregory, forward for the men's soccer team, stretches during warm-up at Tuesday's practice. Gregory leads the team in goals and assists, and recently scored a hat-trick (3 goals) against Columbia Christian.
